KindergartenReading & Writing Reading at home for pleasure is the best and easiest daily routine you can do to strengthen your child's understanding of stories. Ask simple questions about the characters and talk about the best parts of a book get your child about the story and making connections to one's own life. Keep it Light Conversations about books to be fun. Quizzing a child for correct answers after reading their favorite book can suck the joy out of the reading experience. Instead, try to ask questions from a place out of curiosity and want to know what your child thinks. This makes them feel that their opinions and thoughts have value. Use the Five Finger Strategy After reading a story, use your hand to help you remember the most important parts of the story. This technique can be used for people aged 4 to 94! Characters – Who was in the story? Setting – Where did the story take place? Events – What happened in the story? How did the story end? Your Take – What was your favorite part? CLICK HERE FOR FIVE FINGER RETELL PRINTABLE PROCESS It When you read with your child, a good technique is to pause for a few pages and check in to see if your child is really grabbing what they are reading. Asking open questions allows them to explain their thinking. If what they say doesn't match the story, you can help redirect them back on track: You say, Did you see the wolf dressed in grandma's clothes? Why is the wolf doing this? Your child says, I do not know Maybe the wolf likes to dress up. You say, do you see the wolf licking his lips and salivating? What does it mean when you see our dog do it? You think the wolf's hungry? What can the wolf try to do? 3 Seconds of waiting time Allow your child enough undisturbed think time to process what is happening. If you ask a question about the story, let them look at the pages and take a few moments to think, at least 3 seconds. We usually just wait a second before we jump in with the answer. Giving answers too quickly takes away a child's thinking time, depriving them of the opportunity to form conclusions on their own. Different ways of reading books are the best way to expose children to new vocabulary, stories and higher level thinking skills. But reading on your own is not the only way for children to access stories. Read aloud and audiobooks offer the same benefits and let the kids enjoy a good book. The NC Kids Digital Library offers hundreds of images read out that let your child hear stories and build their skills before reading.
