How to say spanish in spanish

Did you think Spain was just Rioja and sherry? Think again. The sleepy giant of European wine is finally on the move. Spanish wine was domed in two versions - oak and very oak. Now, there's less emphasis on keeping wine in a barrel for a long time and more on fruity taste, and wines are all the better. Spain's staggering progress over the past decade has made it a hotbed of wine activity. Rioja now has several challengers for the red-wine crown, and the whites have improved from all recognition. Fragrant, berry-rich Tempranillo grapes are power behind most of the reds from Rioja, Ribera del Duero, and the up-and-coming regions of Toro and Cigales. In Catalonia, the old vines of Garnatxa and Cariñena and the newcomers Cabernet Sauvignon, Syrah and Merlot are mixed with impressive effect. Priorat is a trendy region, while neighboring Montsant also impresses. In the northwest, try Bierzo red made from Mencía, believed to be related to Syrah. Further south, check out the juicy young red English Channel and more serious fare from Jumilla from Monastrell, french mourvèdre. White supremacists are also improving fast. Check out the fragrant Albariño from the Rias Baixas region and zippy Sauvignons and Verdejos from Rueda. And, of course, for sherry (see fortified wines). Spain has a larger vineyard area than any other country. Advertising Candidate for the least pronounceable wine in Spain? Advertising How about Getariako Txakolina, from around Bilbao?
