Daily life activity: Imagine you are a famous architect and you have only discovered the structures of an ancient Greek house. Go through every room, carefully track the pieking as well. This group produces traces (pieces of past) for this room and its purpose in ancient Greece. Then, each group room becomes a search station. Set up your stations around your classroom and let students find each station and create a list of discoveries that tell us about daily life in ancient Greece. Then open the class discussion. Webcasts & amp; Resources For Ancient Civilizations Online Greece Geography Shape For Ancient Greece What were the important features of the geography of Greece? Sprinkle the greek land outside the Mediterranean. It is a peninsula, a body of water that is on three sides. There are thousands of islands in Greece. A bay of water divides the peninsula into about two. South Tap forms another peninsula called Palauponnisos (pahil • uh • puh • to • suhs). A narrow strip of land called an isthmus (a• muhs) links Palauponnisos in the rest of Greece. The earth's renovation and climate mountains cover 70 to 80 percent Greece. The mountains divided it into many areas. Unusual land renovation made transportation difficult on the ground. There was no big river in Greece that people could travel on. The renovation of the land made it difficult to unite Greece under a government. Greece is mild, rainy winter and hot, dry summers. In Greece, the maximum temperature range is about 50° f in winter. Warm climate scented outdoor life. For example, outdoor sports events such as races were an important part of Greek culture. Because of the coastline of Greece-its long coastline, there are many ports in Greece. It is close to the port, Paraeus, the capital of TheAthans and the ancient city. The use of land in the mountains of Greece covers 70 to 80 percent Greece. As a result, about 20 to 30% of its Greek land was very good for agriculture. Even, the ancient Greeks found ways to make the best use of the land that they had. • They raised grain on a few open fields. Olive trees increased on the wells of these plains. The Greek land of agriculture was the Rocki, so only 20 to 30 percent of it was good for agriculture. Even more than half of all Greeks were farmers or haders. Most of the fields were located in the valleys among the mountains. The greek sins were part of the upclass. Generally, only men own ownership. A person who can support the ownership of the land himself. He had enough wealth to pay for goods like helmet, mould, and sours. He allowed him to serve in the army and defend his homeland . As a result, the respected selling of people, which was a higher place in society than traders or poor people. To get more fields, the Greeks founded colonies in other areas. The western end of Anattolya had wide plains and rivers. The Greeks founded several colonies there. Lack of resources fields was not just a problem. Greece also lacked natural resources, such as precious metals. The Greeks had to find that resource somewhere more. One source was the stone for the construction of Greece. Greece also had plenty of good sites for ports. -----

----- trade in Greece helps to raise many important questions about how the sea affected Greek life? As the rivers affected other ancient cultures, the sea affected Greece. Greece has a long coastline, and most places in Greece are less than 100 miles from the coast. In fact, many cities were built directly at ports. Greek ships-In recent days, people built this ship to show how ancient Greek fishing vessels looked. Water highways Many oceans played a major role in the life of ancient Greece. The largest was in the south of the Mediterranean. The Sea of Ayoni and the Black Sea had branches of the Mediterranean. The Ayuni Sea is west of Greece. The Aegean Sea is in the east of Greece. These water highways connected to most parts of Greece for each other. The Greeks used the oceans as a route to transport. In greeks, the smating people were made expert and superrich. They built warships for fighting for trade and for sealing ships. Some ships had two or three levels. The most sealing ship had a single mastand square cell. The Ayoni Sea and the Black Sea are not very large. Small ships can stay close to the shore or sail from the island to sail around them. Once the Greeks learned these routes, they could seal other areas. The sea was a source of fish, an important part of the Greek diet. The Greeks traded at local ports along the fresh fish coast from the sea. The Greeks also dried some kind of fish so that they could move over great distances. Trade and commerce did not produce much grain in Greece, but in some areas produce additional olive oil, wine, onone, and fine dishes. Greek cities-states bought and sold additional goods from each other. In addition, the Greeks traded these goods in the Black Sea and other areas including Egypt and Italy in the Mediterranean. The main products that the Greeks bought were grain, wood for the building, animal hides, and slaves. Greeks also traded for nuts, the inn, cheese, and flex, which was used to make clothes. The earliest Greeks -----

----- how trade impacted Culture? It has over thousands of years of developed and commercial trade greek culture. The early Greeks were moved about to the Greek peninsula about 2000 bc The Mecanian civilization was built on the first Greek civilization Paluponnisos. It was named after its most important city, Myco (see my ••). A king reigned over every city of Mecanean Greece. The mecanens were traders. Their culture includes writing, gold jewellery, bronze weapons, and fine dishes. Their civilization was almost 1200 bc, perhaps because of the invaders. After the fall of The McAnaens, Greek culture refused it. People no longer kept any written records. Without such records, historians know little about the period 1200 to 750 before the new development in Greek culture in time, reintroduced by Greek culture. One reason why greeks have learned from other people, such as The Pahonacanas (fih • The Sash • Yohns). They were another important businessmen who lived on the coast of the eastern Mediterranean. By trading with others, Pahonacanas spread his writing system. Use it to stand up to sound 22 signs. A system of such symbols is called alphabet. Writing system changes with the time of the characters. Greeks borrowed 22 letters of phananson letters but wrote different symbols. In addition, the Greeks added two letters. From the time of ancient Greece, their characters are produced in one used in the US today. American signature language is a language for deaf that uses gestures to give meaning to this. It includes an alphabet. Greeks picked up the letters Phenansen between 900 and 800 bc. They changed some letters according to their language. Greek characters later prepared in their letters of 26 characters. Greeks also learned about coins from trade with other people. The sacan was invented in Anattolya about 650 bc. Most of the greek stake was being made by 500 bc. After all, the Greeks have also developed literature and new government. You will learn more about these developments in lessons 2 and 3. Lesson Summary • Greece Limited Hill Geographical of Agriculture and Political Alliance. • Greeks to connect with each other on the sea and connect with the wider world. • Trade brought an alphabet and coins to Greece. Why does it matter now... The Greek alphabet influenced the development of all Western characters including English characters. Alphabet.
