The U.S. shipyard yard Ray is a Ford in the construction of ships. It was not without reason that the founder lived in Detroit, the center of the American auto industry. In 1959, Connie Ray and three friends built the first boat in the garage of a small office, which he bought from the owner. After luring General Motors talented designer Harley Earl, Ray entrusted him with the design of the first fully fiberglass vessels. Serial factory production was established after three years. As car worries, they produced a new model every year, and in 1969 they had a dozen boats in their range. In the late 1970s it was the second largest U.S. shipbuilder, and in 1986 the company was bought for $350 million by Brunswick Boat Group Corporation, the largest manufacturer of recreational boats in the world, providing a new impetus for the development of the shipyard. Three of the company's factories operate in the US state of Florida, two more in Brazil and Poland. The production is fully automatic. The interior of yachts is tested using full size layout. In addition, the company has its own laboratory, where components from suppliers are thoroughly tested, the latest materials are examined, and weather conditions are modeled. This makes it possible to understand what will happen to the hull, constantly under the scorching sun or trapped in the harsh conditions of the northern seas. The yard offers a wide range of ships: from small boats with an outboard engine and cabin cruise boats that can be transported on a car trailer to luxurious 20-meter yachts of various types: closed cruise yachts with a hardtop, planning yachts with flybridge, open cruise yachts.
