Through the centuries, the maze that is the old city of Bratislava has lost none of its charm. These pedestrian paradises have narrow pedestrian streets, pastel 18th-century buildings and cafés. Restaurants, each more chic than others, line the streets, and the main square often hosts free concerts. Outside the center, the architectural contrast is more pronounced. The controlled bars of communist-era buildings are located across the river, overlooking the city centre. The old castle, meanwhile, shares the skyline with a new bridge with the appearance of a UFO. The country's accession to the EU has led to an influx of investment in Bratislava, but the global economic crisis has halted many construction sites. Although today the pedestrian center is mainly visited by tourists (seeing restaurant prices, this is not surprising), Bratislava is still a vibrant city. Many people Le personnel est très agréable.
