If I had to choose, I'd choose the Torin brand. I hope this helps. The lighter is better, much easier to transport around if necessary. I use it on an SUV and the maximum height of 18 or so is good (compared to Torin, which is 24). To store if I run out of room March 5, 2020 6:06 bassbindevil Newbie February 15, 2018 10 posts 2 upvotes March 5, 2020 6:06 pm I bought a Torin floor jack in the early 2000s from Costco (came with two bonus jack stands). (I don't remember the exact model, but it was black, had the quick-lift foot pedal feature, and had enough lift for a 4x4.) After a few years and occasional use (and being stored in dry), began sagging under load. I didn't try to replace the seals, I just gave them to Freecycle. It weighed heavily (almost 80 pounds), which made it hard to move around on surfaces of dirt or gravel. I would look for a lighter weight jack if I was shopping for one today, so of the two, I would choose Arcan. He looks like Arcan. I think the lighter is much better when you store it in the basement. If you leave it in the shed, it can be stolen. Mine is hard, even if its 59 lbs, imagine how much 79 lb could make you back stability. I'd go after Arcan. Arcan will probably not move freely as Torin on wheel design, but then again, you do not want jack slipping and sliding. Mar 5th, 2020 10:10 GrantK Newbie 13 January 2006 88 posts 29 upvotes Markham Mar 5th, 2020 10:10 i bought Torin last year. I've been planning on getting a pick up in the future, but for now I'm using it on my IS350. It's rock solid and don't complain about lifting the weight of the car like my 10-year-old Mastercraft 2.5 ton jack does. yes, it's hard and bringing it out of the basement twice a year isn't necessarily fun, but it's not too bad. Just think of it as getting your deadlifts in for the day March 5, 2020 10:42 geokilla Deal Guru Mar 1, 2008 14451 posts 3559 upvotes Toronto, Ontario March 5, 2020 10:42 stupid question, but why not arcan one have soft looking jack pad while Torin one does? Does it matter when you take the car? Tue 7th, 2020 7:25 am nickgritz Member Oct 23, 2014 312 posts 227 upvotes Laval, QC Mar 7th, 2020 7:25 am all these jacks are made by Blackjack, Arcan, BigRed... Etc. They all seem to be of good quality. Dont stress on the brand name too much. Jack lower profile will work better for sports cars or car with smaller spoiler kits that will come into contact with the potentially cracked plastic lifting arm. I've had my Torin branded Costco jack for almost 20 years. Still working great. However, what are you lifting with it? If it's just a usual car, you can even use a 1.5-2 ton all-gun jack and be perfectly fine and be pretty easy. If you're lifting a CUV/SUV (and you don't mean a cute-ute or wannabeSUV), then you'll need something with both more capacity and elevator height, though. Even then I used a 1.5-tonne all-alum low-profile jack to pick up a Q5 before, though not very high - it's enough to pick up a corner and change a wheel, but that's about it and I wouldn't use it because on a frequent basis. According to the poster above, most of these China-made jacks are all made in the same places, regardless of brand. All are the same or clones of the other being made in similar facilities in China. Brand shouldn't matter too much, but if you want easy you'll want to go with something that is either alau or alau & steel mix. All-steel is probably more heavy, but if you're just a home user who will use it occasionally I don't see any reason to buy all-steel. Steel.
