Mother of the bride hairstyles shoulder length hair

Whether you keep your hair length short, medium or long, there are plenty of beautiful ways to get you to frame your face perfectly, complement your chosen outfit, and be as flexible and easy to maintain as you want it to be. HairShort short hair is a practical choice for busy women who still want to look elegant and feminine. It allows you to maintain a little feminine length without the maintenance that really long hair requires. Another great advantage of long shoulder hair is that it gives you a lot of versatility when it comes to hairstyles, whether you want to wear it or have it on your face. A blunt cut with a slight lateral separation is one of the most low-maintenance yet elegant ways to cut long shoulder hair. The ends boards are ideal for making thin or thin hair look thick and healthy. A slight lateral separation is especially flattering in square and rounder face shapes, as it helps to narrow the appearance of wider cheekbones. JohnnyGreig / Getty Images If you've been playing with the idea of full bangs but aren't ready to make the big hit, side sweep bangs could be a fancy compromise. Keeping the bangs long with feathered ends and sweeping them to one side looks elegant for everyday use and helps add extra volume if your hair is okay. YuriyZhuravov / Getty ImagesInsofos with hand lick create extra drama and can make a shoulder-high haircut look glamorous for an evening look. To achieve this, use a flat plate to rotate the ends. This look is ideal for accentuating and thinning your jaw. Adding subtle reflections on the strands around the face draws more attention to the eyes. Kathrin Ziegler / Getty ImagesA low bun works better on long shoulder hair than a tall bun because you can lift all your hair without leaking lost strands. This look is relaxed enough for every day, but it can look stylish for work. Start by picking up your hair in a low ponytail and securing with a hair elastic. Turn the ponytail and then wrap it around the elastic, hiding the ends under the bun and securing it in place with pins. You can try to leave a free strand to wrap around the base of the bun to give the look a more polished finish. MonikaBatch / Getty Images Blunt bangs are a bold style that can make long shoulder hair look more agile. Before taking the step, it is important to make sure that you are willing to put in the maintenance that this style requires. Blurred bangs look best when carefully stylized using a hairdryer and a round brush. Alvarez / Getty ImagesA ponytail It's perfect for long shoulder hair, as it allows you to gather all your hair without using clips or pins. This style is quick to achieve, so it's great if you need to pull your hair out of your face but you're tied for time. If you wear this style for work or on a night out, you can wrap a lock of hair around the elastic to disguise it, securing with a pin pin make your ponytail look more polished. Nomadic Images / Getty Waves are a fashionable way to add texture to a long shoulder haircut. Use a wide barrel curler to create this look, bending the sections in opposite directions to prevent waves from looking too stiff. This style works best on unwashed hair, as the wave will fall off clean hair very quickly. If you have fine hair, combine this look with blunt cut ends for maximum volume. The highlights of TomFoldes / Getty ImagesPastel are a fun way to add personality and texture to long shoulder hair. You can choose to add subtle slices of color while maintaining your natural tone or color your entire hair head if you want a bold look. If you can't or don't want to commit to permanent pastel color, hair chalk is a great way to achieve the look for the weekend or a special event. You can shampoo the chalk to leave its natural color when you're done. Wayra / Getty ImagesThe look never goes out of style and is an elegant way to wear your hair down for a party or other big event. To achieve this, you will need medium-barrel heated rollers. Large, inflatable curls give a large volume to the long hair on the shoulders. Set the style with plenty of lacquer to give you the necessary permanence power. CoffeeAndMilk / Getty ImagesUsing a hairband is a quick and easy way to create an elaborate updo for long shoulder hair. It's also a great way to disguise fat roots if you don't have time to wash your hair. Start by choosing an elastic headband and place it on top of your hair. Starting from the sides, rotate your hair around and under the band until all your hair is facing up, fixing in position with pins. Khosorok/Getty ImagesMedium HairMedium long hair looks flattering on most face shapes and allows you to maintain a little female length while requiring less maintenance than ultra-long locks. Keeping hair length on your shoulder or a little longer gives you the option to put your hair up when you need to remove it from your face. Whether your hair is straight, wavy or has inflatable curls, there are plenty of elegant and elegant ways to use your hair half up or down. The Gibson roll originated in Edwardian Britain, but enjoyed a renaissance during the 1940s as an elegant and practical way for women to take their hair off their faces while working during the war. This retro style is ideal for medium length hair. Start by twisting the hair on the sides of your head back on yourself until you reach the back of your head. Secure in a low horse with an elastic hair and roll over itself. Put your hair under it and secure it in place with pins. panic_attack/Getty ImagesThe long bob, or 'lob', is more versatile than a traditional bob, shorter, as it retains enough length so you can tie your hair. This style is ideal for making even fine hair look thick and healthy. This style usually takes longer forehead, framing his face. This makes it flattering for all shapes on the face. VeranikaSmirnaya / Getty ImagesA stylish bass bun looks elegant for work, but can also be relaxed enough for the weekend. This look is easier to get than a high bun for medium-length hair, as it will leave no lagging hair on the back of the neck. To create a low bun, gather your hair in a low ponytail and tie it with a hair elastic. Turn the ponytail and then wrap it around the elastic of the hair, sticking the tips underneath and fixing it in place with bobby pins. PeopleImages / Getty ImagesA low ponytail is a classic style and a quick way to lift your hair in a hurry while still looking elegant. Prepare your hair beforehand by smoothing with a flat plate or curling the ends, depending on the look you want to achieve. Once you've tied your ponytail in place, create a polished finish by wrapping a lock of hair around to disguise the elastic and secure it with a pin. Tsvetkov Todor / Getty ImagesThe month-sized waves add a little edge and texture to a medium-length haircut. This style is easier to achieve in hair that has not been washed for a day or so, since very clean hair will not hold a wave so easily. Using a curler, curve each section in a different direction to create a more natural and unstructured look. Add some hair wax to create a messy texture. CoffeeAndMilk / Getty ImagesThe quickly cut bang gives a cool, sixty-to-half-length hair and helps frame your face. This style is especially flattering if your face is heart-shaped. If you're not ready to commit to blunt bangs, ask your stylist to cut the bangs with side-swept feathers for a smoother version of this classic look. borchee / Getty ImagesThe hairstyle is more suitable for medium length hair than a braided crown, which requires more length. It's a great way to frame your face and it works well on curly hair. To achieve this style, section the front of your hair, leaving your back loose. Starting behind the ear, the Frenchman braids the front section firmly above the forehead until it reaches the other ear. Finish the braid a little lower than the ear so you can secure it with an elastic and hide the loose end under the rest of your hair. CarlosDavid.org/Getty ImagesBoxer braids are a fashionable way to remove your hair from your face for a casual look or while you are exercising. Split your hair into a straight separation through the center of the French head and braid on each side, securing at the ends with To give this look a twist, try Dutch braiding your boxer braids. Instead of knitting the sections on each other, knit them underneath instead. This gives braids more volume. Jeffbergen/Getty ImagesThis braided up-do looks elaborate, but it's actually easy to achieve. Its relaxed style makes it ideal for medium-length hair, as a few flyaways won't matter. Start by braiding your hair in two ponytails. Wrap them around the back of head, one above the other, and pin instead. Put the ends in the hair to hide them and secure them with pins. Yue_ /Getty ImagesA deep side part is a great way to dramatically but temporarily change your medium haircut without committing to a whole new style. This look works well with all hair types and textures. One of the main advantages of a deep side part is its ability to thin the face. Works with loose hair or an updo or ponytail. SrdjanPav / Getty ImagesLong HairUna of the best things about having long hair to rival Rapunzel is its versatility. It's too easy to fall into a styling routine and be tempted to cut it into a shorter style. However, long hair gives you the option to experiment with the widest possible range of hairstyles to completely transform your look without going through the chop. Whether your hair is fine, thick, curly or straight from poker, there are plenty of great ideas to try. Elegant, shiny hair with poker skin creates a big impact and looks great with formal work clothes or casual clothing. The key to this look is to make sure your hair is hydrated before using your flat griddle thoroughly, as dry hair will be baffled. When the hair is dry, apply a heat-protective spray to prevent it from wearing fire. Another secret to getting shiny smooth hair is to use the flat griddle at a temperature between 300-350 degrees. Although many flat irons have higher temperatures, these are best suited for professional queratin treatments rather than domestic use. Repinatanatoly/Getty ImagesTop knots are best suited for very long hair, as you can achieve the look without lost hairs. This style is quick to achieve on days when you're pressed for time, but it still looks slippery enough for work clothes. Start by pulling your hair into a high ponytail and secure with a hair elastic. Be sure to brush loose strands and avoid bumps. Turn the ponytail and then wrap it around the elastic, holding tightly with pins. Deagrez / Getty ImagesPrehensible and undone T-shirts are the perfect way to complement a casual look while still making long hair look elegant. The secret to creating lasting waves is to make sure the hair is not too clean working through a styling mousse or sea salt spray. If you start with ultra-clean, slippery hair, the waves won't hold. When creating beach waves with tweezers, curl the sections in different directions. Otherwise, they will look too uniform and formal. PeopleImages / Getty ImagesBangs with Central separation give the long hair a fresh and relaxed atmosphere of the 70s. This style is ideal for framing your face and particularly suits women with heart-shaped faces. If you're not interested in taking the step and getting bangs cut off, you can get clip-in versions to get the look without the commitment. Rocky89 / Getty ImagesA Dutch braid looks intricate but is no harder to achieve than a French braid in Hair. This style creates extra volume and looks especially eye-catching if you have a vibrant hair color. To create a Dutch braid, divide the hair into three sections on the crown. Screw the left thread under the center (the opposite of a French braid), then thread the right strand under the new center strand. Repeat the process, picking up the hair from one side as you go, and make sure at the bottom with a hair elastic. dimid_86/Getty ImagesA ponytail is an easy and elegant way to get your hair polished if you are in a hurry. The trick to make this style look elegant is to condition the hair first, making it elegant and shiny. Whether it's flat iron for a glossy finish or tong in some curls at the end. Once you've picked up your hair and secured it, wrap a lock of hair to disguise the elastic. Finish with a touch of hairsop to give the style staying power. YuriyZhuravov / Getty ImagesA braided bun looks elegant and like it took a long time to achieve, but it's actually very simple. To achieve this, tie your hair in a high ponytail. Section of a third of your hair. Twist the rest and wrap it around the elastic in a bun, securing with pins. Braid the remaining section and tie the end with an elastic. Wrap the braid around the bun, sticking the ends and fixing. Alter_photo/Getty ImagesThe banana chignon is a classic bridal style, but works just as well with formal work clothes. This style works best with long hair, as you can achieve an elegant and clean look without lagging hairs. Start by brushing and smoothing the hair well. Gather it in a low ponytail, then turn the hair inwards and upwards on itself. Secure within the length of the chignon using pins, taking care to put them under the hair, so that they are invisible. Patternstaff / Getty ImagesThe curls of the skin are a glamorous way to wear long hair down. Show your natural volume if you have thick hair, or create extra if your hair is okay. Using a wide barrel curler, wrap the sections of the hair and hold for only a few seconds, so that the curls are not too stiff. If your hair is okay, going back to the root will help create more bounce. CoffeeAndMilk / Getty ImagesThe 'huni', or a bun half down, is a nice and informal way to lift and move away part of your face while showing its length. This style works best on thick hair. Gather the top half of your hair, tying in a ponytail with a hair elastic. You may want to use a mirror to make sure that the gap between the top and bottom is straight. Turn the horse and then wrap it around the elastic to form a bun, putting the end underneath and fixing it in place. Alter_photo / Getty Images Images Images
