Ozark Trail 12-Person Base Camp Tent with Light. Key features Fully freestanding. Fiberglass poles. Single-layer structure. 8 Mesh windows. 2 Doors. Integrated LED string. E-cable port. Great wall organizer. Extra long tent. What it's about this 12-person Base Camp Tent is part of their new series that also includes tents for 9 people and for 6 people, all built in the same style. This is a simple single-room construction with 16 foot diameter. Note that the manufacturer uses the name Ozark Trail 16 x 16 Sphere Tent on their website. If you realize from the photos it's a fully freestanding and dome-style tent, the poles are added from the outside and you have no extra flying here. So it's a single-layer construction. Also note that this is an incredibly long tent with 92 inches (234 cm) of peak height. You won't find tents on the market for much longer. I included it in my list of very long tents for camping. In fact, to the best of my knowledge, it's the biggest dome-style tent currently available on the market. I've never seen a bigger dome tent. So I added it to my list of extra large family camping tents. Built-in LED system So this light system is a good bonus bonus You have settings for high, low and medium light, and the system is powered by a Universal Power Bank or batteries. The image below shows the ambient. Because of this feature, I added it to my list of illuminated tents. Inner views with the lights on. Ozark Trail 16 x 16 Sphere Tent – Who is it for Capacity-wise, the tent is suitable for 12 people, but this number isn't realistic for a real camping because you have no storage area here. But the total floor surface is indeed large, 201 ft² (18,7 m²), and it gives 16,7 ft² (1,56 m²) per person if used by 12 people. So I'd say it's for a maximum of 6 - 7 people or so if used for camping. But a group of friends on a summer festival or an open-air concert will manage to put 9 pads on the floor. In light of its diameter, it can easily accommodate three queen airbeds. Seasons-wise and climate-wise, this tent looks like some of these expeditionate tents, but in fact it's not such a tent. What you have here is a summer campsert for quiet weather conditions without much rain. The manufacturer describes it as a 3-season tent, but I wouldn't take it seriously. The structure is with so many poles that cross each other numerous times and this makes it very strong against the pressure on either side. So it will indeed act well in the event of winds. What's missing here, though, is a full-coverage fly and that will change a lot. As it is, with so many nates and with zippers on numerous windows and doors, this tent should not be used in a rainy area. This tent is so affordable and it looks really cool so it makes sense to buy an extra tea and put it upstairs as a raindop. You have some pretty tarps from Keltly that would do the job, check out this Keltly Noah's Tarp Sun Shelter, the largest being a 20 x 20 foot square. It won't go all the way to ground because the length of such a half-sphere is about 25 feet, but if you spread it like a roof and fix with masculinity, it will do the job. Weightwise, with its 49.08 lb (22.3 kg), it is a heavy tent with the Area/ Weight ratio 0.84 m² / kg, but it is not surprising in light of so many poles. You'll see how it stands compared to some other tents in the same size range. One thing's for sure, you don't want to change your camping spot regularly with such a tent. There are many poles and sleeves here. Materials & Construction The poles There are 10 poles in total here and it is fiberglass. That's why the tent is so heavy. Six of them create the dome and four go around adding to the stability so you have a lot of crossing points. Everything is color-coded and you have three different colors for the poles and sleeves. The fabric The fabric is polyester and that's pretty much all that by the manufacturer. So it's very disappointing, to say the least. There are no indication of waterproof and as I said above, the rain avoids better. You have mesh and panels on all the windows and doors. Surprisingly, zips are on all panels and that's what you wouldn't expect in such an affordable tent. But it was a must in light of its dome structure, otherwise panels on the curved windows wouldn't close the space. Color-coded setup. One of the two floor vents. Ventilation This tent has many windows with mesh and panels, but if it rains you should keep them with panels. So it should rely on vents and you have them here 4 in total, 2 floor vents and 2 ceiling vents, one pair on two opposite sides, one floor vent is shown above. They're with mesh and zip (you need the mesh to raise the Velcro tighter), so it's well done, no objection here at all. This is the light control unit. Media bag and storage bags. Other features Carry bag included. 26 Steel tent game included. Organizer with media center and various bags is included, see the picture above. Various mesh bags on the walls. Lantern loops on the ceiling. An electric cable port is available near one of the doors. Please see this tent live in this video: Specifications Type: dome tent, freestanding. Ozark Trail 12-Person Base Camp Tent with Light vs Competitors Of Course, there are no other similar summer camping tents to compare. So I decided to show this tent side by side with two other 12-person tents that also summer camping tents but cabin-style. This can give you an idea of the advantages and disadvantages of the two different styles. As you realize they're all heavy, but the Core tent is with an immediate setup, and those cabin tents have rooms compared to the one room in the Ozark Trail tent. But the other two are very expensive tents, at least compared to this tent here that is incredibly affordable and worth considering from this point of view. FeaturesCOMPARE PACKAGE FEATURES Final Thoughts, Rating, Pros and Cons It's easy to get delighted when you see such a structure like this Ozark Route 12-person Base Camp Tent with Light. It's even more so when you see its price. But to make it a reliable tent, it is necessary to add a fly, as I suggested above, a big tear or anything similar will do the job. So make no mistake comparing its price to some of those expedition or winter tents that look similar in style. I've seen some people do just that, but it's a big mistake. See below how I got it if you need more options in the same size range, go to my list of 12-person tents. Check out this Northwest Area Grand Canyon Canyon if you want something completely different in the cabin style. Note that this is not a sponsored text and I am not paid by the brand.
