We will cover the horrific and sad story of a sick young woman who has been expelled over and over again, rather than given medical attention. If you've ever seen emily rose's exorcism, you know a little bit about this story. We will be smeared with the tragic death of Anneliese Michel and the next trial, where her parents, along with two priests, were charged with her death. Was Anneliese possessed or was she sick? We'll let you decide. Listen to this episode you can listen to on your favorite podcast player or you can download it below. Anneliese is getting healthier. She was raised in a strict, traditional Catholic family – her father was a trainee priest (although it seems odd given the fact that Catholic priests were supposed to be unmarried) and three of her aunts were nuns. She was described as bright and sympathetic. Anneliese's troubles began in September 1968, when she was 16. It was during this time that she experienced her first episode of lost consciousness. After that, she felt some pressure on her down and she was hinged on the bed. It wasn't until 11 months later that she had another episode. That's when they took her to the family doctor, Dr. Vogtu, then the neurologist Dr. Luthy. Dr. Luthy ran the EEG, but nothing was found. He thought it was some form of attack. Anneliese had another episode in 1970, after which she was prescribed anticonvulsant drugs. In 1972, she was prescribed Dilantin. After Drugs.com, dilantin is an anti-epileptic drug called anticonvulsant. It works by slowing down the impulses in the brain that cause seizures. It's important to know that her sisters had heard them too. She also told people that she heard a voice that cursed her in hell. According to Buzzfeed Unsolved, her mother was terrified when she She stared furiously at the statue of the Virgin Mary with her eyes turned black, jet black. To make matters worse, her mother went on to say that her hands had turned into thick claws with claws. In September 1973, Anneliese had a neurological meeting with Dr. Luthy. She described visions of demon faces being tortured and told the doctor that she felt the devil was in her. It has also been reported to smell a burning sensation and others around it have also reported smelling. Mrs. Michel said dr. Luthy recommended that they see a Jesuit (a.k.a. a religious official), a fact provided by Dr. Luthy later denies it. However, according to Anneliese's mother, the family went to talk to her father Ernst alt. Two months later, in November 1973, Anneliese went to see a Freudian psychiatrist, who diagnosed her as neurotic, and also said she may have been epileptic. Another neurologist agreed to have epileptic samples. During this time, it was taken off the dilantine and put on tegretol, which is a stronger drug for epilepsy. In July 1975, we jump forward until July 1975, when Anneliese's behavior deteriorated. It was said that she prayed all night, ate spiders and flies and even licked her urine from the floor. She also destroyed the walls of the razing and the sacred paintings. Witnesses said she exhibited near the superhuman power and once threw her sister as if it were a plyp before apparently squeezing an apple into her arm until the fragments exploded through the room. A priest named Father Rodewick was convinced he was possessed. After consultation with Bishop Josef Stangl, the exorcism of Anneliese was officially confirmed by his father Wilhelm Renz as an exorcist. In September 1975, Anneliese's first exorcism ritual was performed by Father Renz on 24 September 1975. Renz allowed some of her sessions to be recorded, with 42 audio recordings recorded in all of them. The footage is absolutely frightening. Listen to them here. In these recordings, he calls many demons: Judo, Nero, Cay, Hitler and Valentin Fleischman, who was a priest who was excommunicated from the church in the 1500s for bad behaviour. Father Alt was particularly shocked that Anneliese would have no way of knowing (Fleishman). Along with the knowledge of hidden things, when a demon starts saying things, The person he has no way of knowing. For example, u information about Valentin Fleischman, father of Gary Thomas, sa interview in Buzzfeed video, shows that the characters sit down with the inclusions: Aversia to the sacred, that is, not to be seen on the display of the tub in the church — or to be completely honest I have questions if they can enter the then he can't look at the cross. Inordinate physical strengthEpiletic seizures He also says that you can often only see white eyes In May 1976, Anneliese deteriorated in May. She was biting herself and others, and she was often succumbing to a head-to-head attack on the wall, causing her family to tie her up to keep preventing her from hurting herself or others. Anneliese didn't want to eat anything either. She said she was not allowed to eat - presumably with the devil. And despite weighing 80lbs, witnesses reported that the little woman coughed up a lot of power. June 1976 Until June 1976, Anneliese had a downed face and had high fevers. Despite her discomfort, she refused to see a doctor. The 30th had another exorcism. It was said that in the meantime, she said only one thing, please, absolute. On July 1, 1976, Anneliese's family went to her room and found her dead. At the age of 23, she died of starvation after receiving 67 exorcisms. Anneliese Michel weighed 68lb. The trial for the exorcism of Anneliese Michel What makes the exorcism of Anneliese Michel so interesting is the fact that he actually went on trial. Anneliese's parents Josef and Anna, along with their father Wilhelm Renz and father Ernst Alto, were charged with negligent homicide in her death. The official charge came on July 17, 1977, just a year after her death. Interestingly, several other people were searched, including Bishop Josef Stanton, Father Adolf Rodewyk and two other church members. Bishop Stangl approved Anneliese's exorcism on the recommendation of 82-year-old father Rodewyk, who is said to be an expert on exorcism rights. Bishop Stangl also appointed Father Alta and Renz for her exorcism. However, prosecutor Karl Stenger said that although they may have been involved in planning the exorcism, neither Bishop Stangl nor Father Rodewyk had any contact with Anneliese or her partners. They were also unaware that she was not in medical treatment at that time. Prosecutor Karl Stenger argued that Anneliese's death could have been prevented if her parents and priest had received her proper medical attention. Despite the fact that she was an adult at the time and probably able to make her own decision, they must have recognized that she was dying. The state claimed that Anneliese had a combination of epilepsy and psychosis, which explains her unreal behavior. Her de-ious mental state led her parents to provide a life-threatening act whose failure led to her death. Stenger quickly broke down the notions of obsession and questioned father Alta's credibility, as two experts testified. Anneleise exhibited signs of schizophrenia. Experts also claimed that the drugs she was taking successfully suppressed the epilepsy that Anneliese had, and that the suppression had actually turned into a delusional psychosis associated with epilepsy. While her psychosis was pre-drug, she was brought to full strength by epilepsy suppression. The court further argued that her psychosis, which came to full strength by suppressing epilepsy symptoms, further played out in Anneliese's fantasies, which were infected by psychosis. In fact, the prosecution noticed that during the exorcism, Anneliese often went to stages where she behaved normally. In the end, it was the fact that the four defendants, instead of seeking medical attention for Anneliese, decided that exorcism was a better course of treatment that ultimately resulted in her death. The defense's defense for Anneliese's parents, along with her father, Renz, and father Alto, fought a soathing fight. Although this case was odd, there was no denying that the four really co-ersed in Anneliese's death. The real question was how much they contributed to her death and how much was her responsibility as an adult. The defense presented eyewitness testimony along with recordings of evidence about Anneliese's possession. They argued that as an adult, Anneliese could be denied treatment, which could include unpleasant things such as calming, force feeding or electroshock therapy. They brought in a witness and a family friend, Thea Hein, to confirm this story. Thea testified that in 1976 she witnessed Anneliese, pleading on her knees that (Hein) not suggested medical care to anyone. The defense continued to believe that Father Alt was actually seeking medical attention before the end of Annelies' life. On May 30, 1976, her friend Dr. Richard Roth visited. Dr. Roth was a scientific curiosity, not a doctor. However, he testified that she had no physical injuries during his visit. This was disputed by co-accused father Renz, who testified that he had multiple bruises along with a swollen face and black eyes. Interestingly, an autopsy for Anneliese revealed that she actually had a healthy brain with no damage caused by seizures, even at a microscopic level. She also had no enlarged females or ulcers on her body, which are often found on victims of starvation. Judgment Despite the defence's argument, the Court ruled in the district court that, at that time, Anneleise was not able to make decisions for herself and should have been forced into medical care. All four defendants were Six months in prison, but both Father Alt and Father Renz were given three-year suspended sentences - in fact, as long as they behave best for the next three years, they would not spend time in prison. The parties also had to pay court costs. Lady Dicks didn't quite magically come up with information for Anneliese Michel's exorcism themselves, they have, in fact, done research beyond Wikipedia (thanks to jerky iTunes reviewer for your one-star commentary), and here are these sources: The Lady Dicks Podcast was created by Tae Haahr.
