His father, Paul, still refused to accept that the end was close to his son. Frank confronted the difficult task of trying to convince Paul that he should give his son permission to die. Vincent returned from an MRU call with a distraught man who, somehow, managed to get his feet caught up in an automatic car wash conveyor belt mechanism. Vincent has done what he can to save Lane's legs but, in order to avoid amputations, is critical that he gets to the ASAP theatre. However, the man was determined to sort out his personal life before that happened. But that proved far more could imagine. Cate arrived at work with a killer hangover and the memory of the scanner what he actually did the previous night. The day proved challenging professionally as she dealt with a woman who feared she lost her baby and was personally confronted for feeling the effects of her actions last night. Sean wasn't impressed by his behaviour late but not his words he passed, they resulted in Cate heading with Jo - perhaps for another night of debauchery. Meanwhile, a woman well dressed, inspired, grandmother was found wandering around a hospital parking lot in confusion. Bart used the skills he learned on his volume spin but obviously there was more to this situation than to meet the eyes. Zoe drew secrets from the past to solve the medical mystery. Jack sits for his surgeon's exam. He is reasonably confident, never a good situation in which to enter the exam room. Arriving late to work she had to cut short conversations with her grieving parents. Paul Taylor, to help an incoming MVA patient, Leonard Stormont, The angelic-looking youth was actually a prisoner who was being transferred to court when the prison van rolled. There were more injuries as a result of the crash which meant Erica couldn't help because her relationship through her brother and Cate so far disappeared in action. Therefore, they are some nurses down who ask Frank to assign Bart to a nursing task. To add to the pressure of Cate's day eventually the surface, despite being brought in by Jo, was unconscious and seizure following GBH's extremes. He was treated by a less forgiving Sean, and subsequently isolated them in ED when he rebuffed their attempts to approach him. Gabrielle warned she was on shaky ground but it didn't stop Cate losing it with Frank, a burst that might just cost Cate her a job. But is this probably what he has been after all together, just too afraid to admit? Although initially angry was excluded from treating any patient from the prison van shift. Erica swiftly learned her brother was involved in the crash and had fled the scene. He also learned that he was being transferred to court to face charges of murder. Erica is reeling. Does the brother he know and love to disappear to him forever? And finally admitted the secrets he was keeping on behalf of the AJ about the truth of what had happened in the Merrivale prison. But instead of grateful for the news, Erica was angry at Dan for keeping her from her. And when he found out Dan spoke to the injured AJ in hospital excuses and watches as he let AJ escape, he felt completely betraved and ended their friendship. The situation only got worse when Dan found AJ waiting for him at the end of the day, his injuries and fears going down for murder making him all the more desperate. When a child is brought shows clear signs of child abuse. Zoe seems to be the only one who comes to mother defense. desperately seeking an alternative explanation. But as the evidence continues to conclude against the mother. Zoe must face the possibility that she let her own experiences cloud her judgment. And Frank must face the ultimate day of judgment when the increasingly indifferent Paul Taylor confronts him with a gun.
