Her death led to Connecticut's first homicide without the victim's body. [1] Disappearance This section is based largely or entirely on one source. A relevant discussion can be found at the talk. Find sources: Heli Crafts murders - news - newspapers - books - scientist - JSTOR (June 2020) Helle Nielsen married Richard Sheats in 1979 and settled with him in Newtown, Connecticut, USA. Hell continued to work as a flight attendant while raising his three children. By 1985, she learned that Richard was involved in several affairs. In September 1986, Hell met a divorce lawyer and hired private investigator Oliver Mayo, who photographed Richard kissing another flight attendant outside his New Jersey home. On November 18, 1986, Hell's friends were on vacation in the couple's new town after working a long flight from Frankfurt, west Germany. They never saw her again. Tonight, a snowstorm hit the area. The next morning, Richard said he took Hell and their children to his sister's house in Westport. When he arrived, Helium wasn't with him. Over the next few weeks, Richard told Hell's friends that they couldn't reach her: that she had visited her mother in Denmark, that she had visited the Canary Islands with a friend, or that he simply didn't know where she was. Helle told some of them: If anything happens to me, don't think it was an accident. She was not reported missing until December 1. The Mayo investigation is convinced that Richard Craft was involved in the disappearance of Helle Crafts. Richard was A Newtown police officer was a part-time police officer in neighboring Southbury, and Mayo failed to persuade local police to investigate him for murder. The prosecutor eventually referred the case to connecticut state police. On December 26, while Richard was vacationing with his children in Florida, soldiers searched his home. Inside, they found pieces of carpet taken from the master bedroom. The family's nanny recalled that a dark grapefruit-sized stain appeared in one area of the carpet, which was later missing. There was also a blood smear on the side of the bed. The forensic investigation was led by Henry Lee, who was a state police investigator at the time. [1] Richard's credit card records show several unusual purchases around the time Helle disappeared, including a freezer not found in the house, sheets and a comforter, as well as renting wood. Among the documents provided to a private investigator by Richard was a chainsaw receipt, which was later found in Lake Zoar covered in hair and blood that matched Helle's DNA. [1] The key clue was provided by Joseph Heine, a local man who works for the city of Southbury and drove an urban snowplow in winter. On the night of November 18, hours after Heul was last seen, Heine was ploughing through the roads during the snowstorm when he spotted a rental truck with an attached tree schipo parked near the shore of Lake Hare. It was only after searching the craft house that Heine reported what he saw. He led detectives to the site where they examined the water's edge and found many small pieces of metal and about 3 grams (85 g) of human tissue, including the crown of a tooth, a nail covered in pink nail polish, bone chips, 2,660 bleached blond human hairs and o type of blood that was of the same kind as helle crafts. This led police to conclude that the remains were likely fed through carpenter Richard was seen towing. Investigators concluded that Richard hit Hel in the head with something dull at least twice, staining the carpet with blood, then keeping her body in the fridge for hours until it froze. He then cut her with the chainsaw, then put them through the carpenter, possibly projecting her fragmented remains into the truck and then kicking them ashore. In order to carry out a murder prosecution, it is necessary to formally determine the death of the alleged victim; this is usually done by identifying an authority which was not available in this case. With the help of a forensic dentist, the dental crown found on the water's edge matched Hell's dental records. On that evidence, on January 13, 1987, the Connecticut State Medical Examiner's Office issued a death certificate; Richard was arrested immediately. In the framework of the preparation for the A state doctor, H. Wayne Carver, received a pig carcass that had been fed through wood. The shape and scars on the pig bone cleats after this process are similar to the shape of Hell's bone fragments, which reinforces the hypothesis that Richard used timber to get rid of his wife's body. [3] Richard Artisan's murder trial began in May 1988 in New London, where he was moved due to widespread local publicity and ended in July with a jury that ended in a hung jury when a single juror voted in favor of acquittal before coming out of deliberations and refusing to return. Richard was sentenced to 50 years in prison on November 21, 1989. [2] Richard, from January 2020, has been released from prison and is in a semi-prison in New Haven. [5] In popular culture, the special edition DVD of the 1996 film Fargo contains a statement that the film was inspired by the Crafts case. [6] In The Good Doctor, an episode of Law and Order: Criminal Intent, the investigation of the missing wife of a plastic surgeon leads to a successful conviction without a corpse, according to the theory that the body is dissolved in syric acid in the bath, and the bones dumped from the plane with a single-engine engine of the husband. The first episode of forensic sleuths was about the murder of Heli Artisans.
