Bed bath and beyond dorm checklist

Look at your child, the real real child. What's important to her? Does feeling at home affect her happiness? Is he a terrible sleeper that needs a comfortable bed? Is she indifferent to a lot of clothes, so the wardrobe provided is appropriate? Does it bring expensive music equipment that will need to be protected? Shopping in college can feel like a common experience with long lists to have, but you only send not one child, a child you know that well, so make sure this college shopping trip is just about them. You can help your teens create a cute and full dorm room without breaking the bank. Note: We are a reader-supported website and receive compensation for purchases made through some links in this post College Shopping How to Save Time and Money 1. Buy when your child is interested. This may seem obvious, but all you have to do is look around a big box store any summer afternoon to know that this is not always the case. Eye-rolling teens and stressed moms abound. The whole process is much easier when your child is on board. Think of a good night's sleep, a well-fed teenager, otherwise busy friends. 2. Ok, you say that your (let me just guess) son has no interest in ever shopping for your dorm needs? yes, it was there. Here are some tactics: I gave you life, you give me your summer hour to make you fix. Fair trade? I use this one for great effect. Grab a snack, we buy online. Finally, there are always threats or bribes. 3. Don't think about your freshman year. While dorms may seem the same, the world has changed beyond recognition and I had to keep telling myself: They have the Internet. Focus on buying your freshman stuff they really need knowing that you can pick up extras to move during the day or you can order them online when they have a better idea of dorm life. 4. Shop where you can get everything you need. There is no reason that this is a summer-long project. Find one store where you can check most, if not all, of your list and complete the task. Check out the college dorm section on target and bed, Bath & Beyond sites to learn about the best one-stop options. 5. Buy quality. I have three children and for me these are 12-year-old dorms; better believe us made hands-me-downs. If it's your chief, you can pass on items that have only been used for a year or two. If this is one of your younger children, quality items will make it to your first apartment. Junk won't make it in the first semester. 6. Shop where there are discounts. Let's be honest, this is a competitive category and many stores want their own business. Download Honey, your browser extension, to find offers and codes. this may be our favorite new hack to save money! Target has a college registry and if your teenager creates an account, they can get a 15% discount dorm purchases. Bed, Bath & Beyond has a new Mover program that can only be what your teen needs, especially if they are moving into an apartment rather than a dorm. Sign up for a 20% discount and FREE truck delivery for furniture. The average family spends more than $1,300 installing their teens in college, and many spend more. Do math. 7. If the college has sent you a checklist, please look at it carefully. It is unlikely that your teen needs every item on their list and it's possible that you already have some things they need at home. Answer these 50 questions first, and then use the college list as a jumping from the point to create your own customized list tailored for your child. 8. Browse your child's college website, the living section, to get information about what the school allows, prohibits and provides. If you know in what dormitory your student lives in, please elaborate to see if there is a floor plan that shows the furniture presented and the height of the loft bed. This under-bed real estate will be your student's most important space to maximize. Make sure to find a list of prohibited items in your teen age college to avoid costly mistakes. 9. Shop where you are comfortable. It's a big company, all go back to school shopping, go where you get the help you need for your mother. If you can shop for brick-and-mortar retailers with sales partners who know about dorm merchandise, this is a plus. To shop online, explore all the virtual style and online support options to improve shopping. Do not forget to pay attention to return strategies and save all receipts. Personalising the dormitory room makes you feel a little more like a home. 10. Shop where the store will be sent FOR FREE. If you are traveling at any distance or do not have a large SUV or minibus, delivery is inevitable. Let someone pay for it. One popular trick is shopping in Bed, Bath & Beyond and take advantage of two programs that do just that. Forget stuffing your car into gills, forget the boxes in the mail. All this has been taken care of. That's how they do every job and we mention they're both free? Pack & Hold® - Select the items you want for your local BBB or online, and when you arrive at the university to move during the day, your order awaits your BBB store closest to campus. Shop now, ship later - allows you to choose what you want now and choose the ship's date at the check box office. Target offers drive up service - book through the app, wait for notification and the sales partner will upload your shopping to the car. This is perfect for items that are always in stock, pick up when you are at university. Amazon Prime Student - This may be the best time for your student to switch from your prime account to your own. They will receive unlimited FREE two-day delivery and exclusive offers for students. 11. Shop Shop Your kid likes to go. You need their buy-in and here is how to get it. If there are snacks or something they want to shop for - except for sheets and towels - factor in that time to get out. 12. Test drive bedding. Our children could not care less about the number of threads, but they could easily feel the differences in how the sheets felt to touch. When buying in a store with a wide selection, before making a decision, spend some time with examples of sheet fabric. Unless you slide directly from the store, wash the bedding before they are packed so that they are soft and if you choose dark colors, without any excess paint. 13. Consider a few pillows. It seems so simple, but teenagers tell us that they sit on their beds reading like they never did at home (there is no family room sofa to rest in the dorm) and a large square or bed rest pillow that can relax against the wall turns their bed into a convenient place to learn. Of course, studying in the library is a better idea, but making your room feel more like a home is a great idea too. There are several categories of items that become complicated, and the top of the bed is one of them. You can pay almost any price for these amazing additions that turn dorm room beds from concrete slabs into a bed, where you can get a good night's sleep. They are available in many price points in a foam egg box, feather bed and memory foam types. 15. Find out your teen washing situation before committing to a laundry hamper or bag. Are machines in their dorms or across the quad? My kids love washing bags that slide under their beds and out of the way. Others find the traditional bag suitable for them better. The possibilities are endless. 16. Get them with your personal pharmacy. Do not buy pre-prepared first aid kits, again, generic, and they ignore what your child needs. Buy a small plastic box and, with your teens, collect together the items they want at school. This is a great opportunity to talk about what drugs to use, when and what symptoms require a visit to a health center. Most freshmen get sick, some are often sick. It will happen at 2 o'clock and they, and you, will be glad that you are ready. Target has this cute bag, which is free if you also choose three other first aid items included in it. 17. Additional toiletries are not a bad idea. Many freshmen do not have a car, and the local drug store can be walkless. If they are still going to have a little under the bed storage, additional shampoo, soap body wash, deodorant, razor knives will not be unsuitable. Of course, they can order these things online, but you know they'll do that after the last drop is gone. 18. Shop where they have to Events. Find out if your local store has any special college events (this year they can be virtual) - sometimes there are additional promotions you'll want to take advantage of. 19. Go easily on cleaning products. We Are likes to think that they used them, and a few of them, but many never open them or forget they even exist. #dormlife 20. Make sure your child coordinates with roommates and suitemates. My son showed up in a set that ended with three coffee makers because suitemates didn't communicate in advance. A couple of quick letters will save everyone time, money and broken carvings lying on the floor of the dorm room. 21. Spend some time thinking about electronics. It is easy to focus on leaves and towels, things we know well. Electronics is one of the biggest costs and it is an ever-changing market. We recommend the following technological things for your dorm room: a small external battery charger to make their phones enlarge when they are on the go. This is one of the best safety devices because your teenager will always want to have a charged phone to contact someone in the event of an accident. Crown and Flown, a book, has many tips on what to buy in college, how to pack and ... how to say goodbye. Incident number: Error_Unknown_Product incident number: Error_Unknown_Product incident number: Error_Unknown_Product rickpilot_2000/Flickr Each year home goods giant Bed, Bath & Beyond releases its campus checklist, sending the soon-to-appear college fresh and their parents into an over-depleted rage. Worrying about preparing for the first year of college, it is easy to forget that some elements of the list are not only unnecessary; they are a complete waste of money. This year's Campus Checklist contains a staggering 92 items, many of which will simply occupy space in a small dorm room: Consider a portable table, which, as it turns out, is just a small rolling table that bb & B wants you to spend $80. We interviewed the latest college gradus and current Business Insider students and came up with some items that college buyers really should pass on: Alarm Clocks: It's 2013. Use your smartphone. Lap tables: If you think you're going to get any work while leaning on the bed, think again. Notebook Locks: It's hard to remember taking them with you wherever you go. The easier solution is simply not to leave the laptop unattended. Ethernet cables: Most universities have WiFi these days, and if a particular building is not available, the school often provides ethernet cable. Back rest: This is nothing more than expensive pillows. Fragrances in the room: They will end almost immediately and are not very effective. Bean Bag Chairs: Fantasy. Most of the freshman dorm rooms are barely large enough to store the furniture they come with, not to mention a large, expanding bean bag chair. Area carpets: Usually it's one semester until must be discarded. Body pillows: Double extra long beds are narrow enough, as they are, without the size of a pillow man who occupied space. Ironing boards: invest in (much cheaper and less space for hooking) ironing blanket or layer layer layer towels on the table and iron there. Extension wires: may be confiscated and discarded. Most schools don't allow them any more and encourage you to bring a power bar with wave protection instead. laundry basket & Washing hampers: you don't need as much! Get a flexible grid hamper so that you can take it to the washing room if necessary. BB & B has a useful tool on its website that allows students to view a comprehensive list of what's included in the freshman dorm rooms of thousands of colleges around the U.S., so look at what your particular dorm needs before you go crazy to the store. Remember: in the unlikely event that you forget something really necessary, you can always buy it later. Later.
