A number of songs are used as Scottish anthems, in particular Flower of Scotland and Scotland Brave. In 2004, lawyers for the devolved Scottish Parliament announced that it was within the legal power of the Scottish Parliament to choose the national anthem for Scotland, contradicting the suggestion that it would be a matter reserved for the UK Parliament. [1] This decision has sparked some interest in this idea and a petition from the Scottish Parliament's Petitions Committee, supported by the Scottish Green Party, has been referred to the Scottish Executive without a recommendation, but they have decided not to take any action because they do not consider this issue to be a political priority. [2] [3] There have been subsequent attempts to reopen the debate on the national anthem for Scotland. [4] Current use At most international sporting events Scotland uses Flower of Scotland as its national anthem. These events include matches between the Scottish National Football Team and the Scottish Rugby Union. [5] The song has also been used as Scotland's winning anthem at the Commonwealth Games since 2010, replacing Scotland with brave. [6] Possible candidates In June 2006, the Royal Scottish National Orchestra conducted an online poll on its website asking visitors to choose the favourite for the Scottish national anthem. With more than 10,000 votes cast, Flower of Scotland came first with 41% of the vote, followed by Scotland Brave with 29%. [7] Tune voices (%) Flower of Scotland 41% Scotland Brave 29% Highland Cathedral 16% Man is man for A' that 7% Scots Wha Hae 6% Other songs that have been designed include Robert Burns' Auld Lang Syne,[8] and Hamish Henderson's Freedom Come-All-Ye. [9] Both of these songs from the 18th century another proposal is Thistle o' Scotland published in 1902. It was originally written in Scottish Gaelic but translated into lowland Scots. [10] The future debate Despite coverage by scottish newspapers, the Scottish Parliament has not yet convened any parliamentary debate on the subject, with Holyrood's enterprise committee mixing up a proposal from Scottish National Party MSP Michael Matheson on the subject.
