Back in the city of Peyton) is an American feature film made in 1961 by José Ferrer. It is a sequel to the popular 1957 melodious Peyton Place, a screening of Grace Metalious's 1959 novel of the same name. The hero, whose character is interpreted as Carol Lynley, is Allison McKenzie, a girl from the small town of Peyton, Massachusetts, who becomes a successful writer. The piece depicts problems that arise when her mother Constance (interpreted by Eleanor Parker) begins a relationship with her married publisher (interpreted by Jeff Chandler). Although the previous film had achieved significant commercial success, producer Jerry Wald was unable to get his high budget, mainly thanks to the studio's 20th Century Fox plunging into the huge financial troubles associated with the historic spectacle of cleopatra. Because he couldn't hire stars from so-called Hollywood A-listers like Lana Turner in the role of Constance, and had to rely on other, lower-ranking and lesser-known actors who demanded lower fees. Although some of the criticism of it made him worse, as well as director José Ferrer, The Return of Peyton Place achieved commercial success, albeit significantly less than the previous film. Young actress Tuesday Weld, appearing in the role of Allison's best friend, made a good impression on her da postane jedna od hollywoodskih zvijezda 1960-ih. Filma I 1964. godine dobio nastavak u TV-seriji Peyton Place koja se prikazivala tokom sljedećih pet godina, postavši jedno od najuspješnijih ostvarenja tadašnje američke TV-industrije.
