Fixer upper mysteries wikipedia

Fans across the country wept in tears as news broke that the fifth season of Fixer Upper would be the last. Television won't be the same without the Gaineses. Chip's goofy antics, Joanna's impeccable sense of style coupled with her down-to-earth kindness that makes you want her best friend, the farm, the shiplap - it feels impossible to live without them. As time ticks down to the final, tear-filled episode of Fixer Upper, it seems appropriate to think about what's coming before and in the future. Will Fixer Upper end on a high note? Here's what we know so far. The final was filmed on November 2, 2017 The finale was emotional. | Joanna Gaines via Instagram Emotions ran high during fixer upper's last big reveal. Joanna Gaines posted her thoughts on her Instagram account, which has about 7 million followers. Today was the last reveal ... We definitely felt the emotion behind each of those steps leading up to the big screen. We love you Fixer Upper, Joanna captioned the photo of the two stars standing next to one of the huge rolling screens of the show they use to reveal dramatic stage. The photo had only one hashtag: #savedthebestseasonforlast. Next: The big reveal wasn't the only surprise. The Gaineses had a surprise of their own on that last day Their colleagues surprised them. | HGTV Chip and Joanna weren't the only ones staging surprises on the last unveiling day. Their Magnolia staff surprised the couple with a balloon tunnel and confetti cannons after filming the latter reveal. We made it to the finish line! We love these people @magnolia, the video caption says. Just another day at the office, Chip jokes in the video as Joanna drives through the cheering crowd. Next: The producer was on the show, too. The producer of the show shared well wishes for the Gaineses His family moved to Waco, Texas, for the show. | Michael Matsumoto via Instagram It's probably impossible to work so close to the Gaineses and not feel drawn toward a private renovation. That's exactly what happened to Michael Matsumoto, the show's executive producer. He and his family ditched Los Angeles in favor of Waco and commissioned Chip and Joanna to turn a dilapidated cabin into a dream farm. The process was documented in the Season 4 show finale. After the last film, Matsumoto wrote on Instagram: 'It's been an amazing journey. A life-changing journey. One I'm blessed to be a part of. I am honored to give you two my friends, my family ... And if I may break the precedent and tell you my only birthday wish from last week, it's that you both always know the love and gratitude we all have for Have. That you always know how you changed the world for the better. I love you guys. Next: Chip and Joanna went abroad after filming the finale. Na Na Packed, Chip and Joanna headed to Italy for some R&R They had to catch up on some sleep. | Joanna Gaines via Instagram You could say that Chip and Joanna were tired after all the emotion and drama that came together with filming Fixer Upper's final episode. The duo immediately left for a holiday to Italy. But at the beginning of their journey, they did nothing but sleep. [We] missed breakfast, lunch, and an afternoon shopping with friends, but that peace felt good! Joanna captioned a photo in Florence. A later photo shows the well-rested couple on and about on red Vespa scooters touring the sights of Italy. Next: The finale will probably be a teaser for this new show. There will probably be a preview of Joanna's next TV project She's not done with TV yet. | Joanna Gaines via Facebook You keep up with the Gaineses in numerous places, even after Fixer Upper ends. For one, they're not done renovating - and it turns out they're not even quite done with television. Immediately after the show's finale, Joanna will star in a Fixer Upper spinoff series called Behind the Design. This new show aims to give viewers an in-depth look at the inspiration behind Joanna's designs. It will premiere in May 2018. Next: The finale will be broadcast soon. The Fixer Upper finale will be broadcast in March or April The final date has not yet been set. | HGTV There is no official air date yet for the season 5 finale, although sources think it will happen in March or April. Fortunately, there won't be a huge gap between the end of Fixer Upper and the beginning of the next show starring Joanna Gaines. Next: This is why they decided to end the show. The Gaineses chose to end the show so they could focus on family They are about to have another baby. | Joanna Gaines via Instagram The Gaineses announced in September that Season 5 of Fixer Upper would be the last, despite the show's crushing success and enduring popularity. While we are convinced that this is the right choice for us, it has certainly not been easy to deal with. Our family grew up next to yours, and we've felt you rooting us on from the other side of the screen. How bittersweet to say goodbye to the thing that introduced us all in the first place, the Gaineses said on their blog. While there may not be any new episodes of Fixer Upper to look forward to, fans of Chip and Joanna Gaines are still closely following the couple's life. And the HGTV hit can still stir up controversy, especially if you're trying to be a diehard Fixer Upper fan that featured some of the design trends on the show go out of style. Another point of controversy? Some people watch how perfect each episode episode out, and have to ask: Is Fixer Upper fake? Let's look at the evidence and see how things look for everyone's favorite HGTV show. Homeowners don't really go house-hunting with Chip and Joanna Chip and Joanna Gaines standing in a fully renovated kitchen. | HGTV Fixer Upper fans love the scenes where Chip and Joanna Gaines go househunting with the homeowners. So when it came to the light that many homeowners have already chosen a home when cameras start rolling, many Fixer Upper critics called the show a fake. But the casting application never hid the fact that many applicants had already bought the house they wanted to renovate, or at least had one in mind. Many homeowners who appeared on the show had already chosen a home before filming begins. And their reactions to the house, their excitement on design day, and the surprise of the unveiling are all real. Producers have to film things several times Ever get the feeling that certain conversations about Fixer Upper were staged? That may be because producers sometimes have to film multiple takes to get the photos they need. Rachel Whyte, a homeowner who appeared on Fixer Upper, told Country Living that producers often have to film things multiple times. So sometimes, they would ask the homeowners to repeat what they said to get it from a different angle. But what's happening is really real. Rachel Whyte explained. The reactions and conversations are real. The hardest thing is to remember what you said earlier when you were asked to repeat it. But some homeowners filmed all their scenes in one day The typical episode of Fixer Upper seems to give the homeowners a relaxed timeline. And it also seems to show that they meet Chip and Joanna Gaines on numerous occasions. But that wasn't always how it worked in real life. A homeowner who appeared on Fixer Upper told Apartment Therapy that he and his wife filmed all their photos in a single day. Jeff Jones explained: We have all our pictures in one day. It was exhausting. The planning usually takes place on the terms of the production company - which may mean that homeowners had to take time off work to appear on the show. You have to sign off on a budget at the beginning It's also possible that those surprise costs that pop up halfway through the typical Fixer Upper episode aren't as spontaneous as they seem. Whyte told Country Living that homeowners should sign off on a budget at the start of the project. The budget goes to your wish list, but the design team will also make decisions about what they think the house should be a TV-worthy renovation. So if anything that affects the budget comes up, the crew doesn't necessarily have to consult the homeowners to choose. The unveiling is actually a big surprise Country Living learned that although homeowners get a one sketch when they sign up to appear on Fixer Upper, their reactions to design day are real. Similarly, Chip and Joanna Gaines really would ask homeowners not to drive through their home if renovations take place. Of course, there is no guarantee that every homeowner who ever appeared on the show met. But the surprised reactions on reveal day are usually very real. It happens in real life like on TV, giant poster and everything. Chip and Joanna wouldn't always renovate the whole house Another topic that tends to come up when you ask the question, Is Fixer Upper fake? Or Chip and Joanna and their crew usually renovated the whole house. After all, the unveiling on many episodes does not include every room in the house. One homeowner told Country Living that she and her husband chose to renovate some of the rooms themselves, in an effort to save money. If we had to take a gamble, we'd say that's probably a common choice. Furniture hasn't all included Fixer Senior critics - or those who consider the show fake - are also upset when they hear that homeowners don't get to keep all the furniture and accessories used to stage the home. But that should hardly come as a surprise; high-end furniture and antiques get expensive very quickly. Does that make Fixer Upper fake? We don't think so. After all, real estate agents often stage homes to help potential buyers see the potential. Plus, homeowners who appeared on the show could buy whatever they wanted and wanted to keep. Moreover, pieces built by Clint, and other custom-made work by Joanna's favorite craftsmen, always stayed in the house.
