Drake middle school principal

Crossett Brook Middle School principal Tom Drake is excited for the start of school. It is especially exciting for students to be able to study in the classroom at least one day a week. Drake said in an interview on August 11th that I am thrilled that we have a plan to get the bodies into the building by September 8th. Said. Drake expects that students will soon return to full face-to-face learning, especially after receiving an email from the Education Agency stating that it is possible for schools to go to full face-to-face learning within a few weeks of being open. If that were true, then it's big, you want to find a way to do it, Drake said. We all want to bring children back to school as long as it's safe and people feel comfortable. Still, some concerns leave Drake cautiously optimistic. The uncertainty is heavy on me, he said, referring to the uncertainty about whether HUUSD is taking the right approach with four and a hybrid plan. Drake, I love local control of Vermont, but let part of me say the governor says, Here's what you need to do, Drake said. We spend a lot of time and energy convincing people that the plan we're proposing is a good, sound one. INEQUALITIES Drake's other concern concerns with educational inequalities that can arise during the region's heavily remote-based opening. We can control equality a little bit more when all the kids come to school, and much less when no child comes to school, Drake said. Drake, for example, said parents are trying to create remote learning panes of children or groups of friends in the neighborhood. They will get together on distant days and parents will turn around those who didn't work that day. But our children and families don't have the resources to do so in large numbers. They can't stay home with their kids, or take their kids to a capsule. Said. The sport is another equality issue, as Drake worries about implementing the region's inaugural model. If only half of our children are at school on Tuesday and there is football practice at 3pm.m, those who are here can walk in the parking lot and go to practice. But what happened at home, someone has to take them at 3:00 that day. Said. While some parents are flexible and available while others are not, this equality becomes a problem, he said. Despite his concerns, Drake strongly supports the region's proposed four-and-one hybrid learning model for the school to begin. Our plan is solid, Drake said. If we can't open a school in Vermont, who can? I agree with the governor. FLEXIBLE Also Drake believes the school district is flexible enough to do everything necessary We can open for a week and start at the bum, increase the COVID numbers and turn them off, Drake said. We're flexible, he added. Drake hopes parents and teachers will learn to believe in the school district's abilities just as much. He considered the possibility of schools quickly returning to a five-day in-person model and the refusal of some parents and staff to enter the building. To give parents and staff hope, Drake wanted to remind them that Vermont is doing well with the coronavirus. We've done a lot of worst case scenario planning, and we think we should do it, but almost none of the worst case scenario plans we've had to enact here. In summary, Drake is looking forward to being human in the building. Like he said, the spirit of the place is people.
