Nuggets blazers injury report

Garrett Ellwood/Getty ImagesPortland Trail Blazers center Enes Kanter said he fired [his shoulder more] during the team's 140-137 four-time OT victory over the Denver Nuggets on Friday night. Kanter has been dealing with an injury since the final game of the Blazers' first-round playoff series against the Oklahoma City Thunder. He ended up playing 56 minutes in the Game 3 marathon against Denver to help Portland take a 2-1 series lead. I think I separated my shoulder more from the first overtime, he told reporters. I had to stick my hand in my jersey because I couldn't carry my hand. I'm glad we got the win. Whatever it takes. You have to sacrifice everything. I'm proud of my teammates. Enes Kanter @Enes_KanterWhatever to finish the game #RipCity with 18 points, 15 rebounds, three steals and one block. He combined for eight of his 16 shots from the field, including the only three. Sometimes you have to make sacrifices to win, he said. I'll get some painkillers for the next game. I hope I can play. But I'll be fine. Kanter signed with Portland in February after the New York Knicks waived it. He was originally scheduled to serve in a reserve role behind starter Jusuf Nurkic, but has become a key player for the Blazers since Nurkic suffered a season-deciding foot injury in March. He has averaged 15.6 points and 10.3 rebounds in eight playoff games. Zach Collins would push into a much bigger role if the shoulder cost Kanter playing time. CJ McCollum, Portland Trail Blazers (Steve Dykes/Getty Images photo) The last time the Portland Trail Blazers and Denver Nuggets fought even during a game of the same size, CJ McCollum showed for the Hall of Famer, his 37-point masterpiece the strongest draft pick in Game 7 tugboat, who placed Portland in his first Western Conference finals in two decades. And while this isn't a win-or-go home, the Blazers have a chance to get a step closer to stamping their flag in the postseason. The Blazers (31-38) come into this game having seen virtually everything go right in their playoff chase. They are the only team to have seeded the numbers with an 8-11 win record in the Orlando bubble, effectively closing the gap between them and the Memphis Grizzlies (32-37) in just one game. Anchored by a strong second-half game - only the Heat and Jazz have been better in the second half on the restart, plus-minus wise - the Blazers have jumped to a 2-1 start, hoping to continue their positive luck against Nikola Jokic and the Denver Nuggets (45-23) in the tilts of a must-win. Denver has a lot to play for, too, even though he's been locked up for a long time. They're only 1/2 behind the Los Angeles Clippers for the Western Conference seed, a development that could be the difference between playing the Houston Rockets or Dallas Mavericks in the first round. They haven't been scary, but they're also respectable winners out of 2 out of 3 in a bubble. Vegas considers the Blazers a 4-point favorite. It's likely to be linked to injuries. In a bizarre (but certainly unfortunate) turn of events, many of the Blazers' biggest rivals have been bitten by an injury error. That may be the case tonight. A lot of Denver's talented backmate skipped the Spurs game, and that doesn't bode well for this SEGABABA. (And no, I will never miss the opportunity to use the term SEGABABA.) Jones suffered a bruise from a fall after an alley at the 10:36 mark of the third quarter. Here's a video of the play via NBCSports Northwest. He was removed from the game and shortly after the team announced he would not be returning. Jones joined the Blazers for the season and signed as a free agent after spending the last 2 1/2 seasons with the Miami Heat. He has since started for the Blazers with a small forward in all four pre-season starts. He earned the 2020 Slam Dunk Contest crown at All-Star Weekend and is known as one of the best high-flyer players in the NBA. The Blazers begin the 2020-21 season next Wednesday night by hosting the Utah Jazz. The effect Bol came in garbage time, and he got the most out of his limited chance. Despite excellent minute production, Bol is more of a bench heater for the Nuggets this season. Isaiah Hartenstein seems to have secured the role of primary backup centre, so while Bol will have meaningful moments, it is not worth drafting him at this stage. 2 DAYS AGO • ROTOWIRE DISCLAIMER: This site and the products offered are for entertainment purposes only and this site does not offer gambling.
