If you have just hired for a new position, you may be told that you will be contacted by a company called HireRight. This company performs screening and background checks on behalf of companies that contract with them to do so. When someone is employed, the company may require them to go through this procedure. Although some have never made any illegal drugs, they can still be a little anxious if they are told they have to go in for this screen. Here we take a look at the HireRight fabric screen deeper. What is the procedure? The type of test to be administered will depend on what the company you are going to work for has prompted HireRight to perform. As an example, they can conduct a urine, oral fluid or hair follicle screening. As part of the quality assurance, they use a chain of custody for the liquid or hair follicles that they collect. They work with highly rated certified laboratories to perform the screen. HireRight cooperates with the companies contracting with them and follows procedures that meet these companies' requirements. This includes test options and other factors that the company wants for new employees. They have many laboratory sites. TestingBecause HireRight terms are a service company, it follows the terms and protocols that the company contracts them within federal guidelines. It is also in accordance with all state laws. This ensures that the integrity of testing remains constant. The main concern is that aggregate material is not contaminated. Many worry that a false positive can happen. However, the process has a security feature when a test shows positively, it will go through a new iteration. This verification testing is very sophisticated. It is able to identify substances that could have triggered a false positive. Precautions have been put in place specifically to protect the donor from being falsely accused of consuming drugs. For obvious reasons, no one who has not used the drug wants to be tested positive. With all the procedures put in place, it is highly unlikely that a false positive would take place. HireRight is respected and relied on by many different companies to carry out their drug tests. References: At the internship right now, was arrested for criminal trespassing.
