You should be glad that there are no laws regulating home abuse, because you would be locked up by now. If your house really started falling on yourself, you'd probably have died from the damp collection in your house -- or in old age. If your house was in good condition, when you lost interest in its maintenance and your roof was relatively new, it will take decades, or perhaps centuries, for death to rage for them. And there will be no beautiful process of dying along the way. Cosmetically, your house is now a wreck, with holes in the leaky roof and exfoliating paint, detached drywall and loose wallpaper inside. Most likely, vandals have happened on your overlooked house and wreaked havoc, speeding up the deterioration process. Structurally, the house is in great trouble, rotting with moisture on wood and boring insects take care of the rest. The weight of the roof may no longer be bearable and has collapsed where the loaders have rotted. Or if the nails that hold the trusses together have lost their hold, the roof may have slipped completely in sections. Advertising There will most likely be holes in the floors under the largest holes in the roof. Walking around the house has already reached the point where it is dangerous, as it could collapse at any time. Vegetation growing around your home can pose a double threat to your home. Grass that is not wedged in your yard can dry during droughts and winter periods. If the tall, dry grass catches fire right outside, your neglected home can also. But vegetation can also contribute to a much longer but equally dramatic destruction of your home. When you take care of your house, you pull seedlings and cut down large trees in your yard to keep the root structure away from the foundation. But you no longer care about your house, and a tree that grows next to the house will do the ultimate damage. When your house was built, it was most likely built on a piece of earth that was dense enough to support the structure. In addition, the foundation of your house was built, and in addition, the structure of your house was built. The roots of a tree that grows next to your house release the dense soil that forms the foot of your house, allowing water to penetrate the ground and further weaken it. After a few years, the base will no longer be able to support the House. This will cause the foundation to shift and crack. This shift causes the structure of the house to move. This alone could lead to structurally unsound walls whether it is brick or wood. A large shift in the structure of the house can even cause a brick chimney -- which should be the last structure to stand in your neglected house -- to collapse as well. Over time, the disruption of the base of your home could also -- a wide and deep hole in the ground under your house. If a deep enough sinkhole had formed, your home would be swallowed by the earth. So how long would it take for your house to deteriorate if you neglected it? That also depends on where you live. In warmer climates, moisture would accelerate the rotting process, causing the structure to fall quickly. In colder climates, however, freezing winters can cause frosty ones to form in the foundation of your home, causing it to break and lose its structural support. Don't forget how well your house was built is also important. Home inspector John Badger tells of a house that was a Goner after only a few years. But house restorer Les Fossel says he saw a house that had been neglected for 40 years and could be saved. I think it's a great way to catch up on current events, hear some stories and learn something interesting. I usually listen to podcasts when I'm working or driving in the gym. Here's my podcast list. This American Life – Big stories, but not many new shows these days. Planet Money - I love Planet Money! I have some blog ideas from this entertaining business podcast. Serial – you spend the season after a story. The first season was great, but the 2nd Bowe Bergdahl story didn't get old after a few episodes. Wait, wait... Don't Tell Me - NPR's weekly current event quiz. The panelists are hilarious. TED Radio Hour – This show is not fulfilling its potential for some reason. My Wife Quit Her Job Podcast by Steve Chou – Great Podcast for Online Entrepreneurs. Steve is my hero. Snap Judgment - Telling history in one fell swoop. This is a mixed bag. Some stories are great, some aren't that great. Embedded - This is a new podcast. The show takes a story out of the news and goes deep. The latest story about Embedded is what I want to talk about today. This is a story about Opana addiction, an opiate prescription drug. I have heard that we have a problem with prescription drug abuse in the United States, but I did not know how big it was. I had no idea that drug overdoses cause more deaths than car accidents. This is a huge problem that affects many lives. The scary part of the story is how quickly a life can fall apart. Joy was a nurse and she injured her back while working. She was prescribed painkillers and became addicted. Less a year later, she was a homeless junkie. Yikes! Here it is in their words. I had a home. I had a car. A house full of furniture, lots of nice things, a large sectional sofa, a glass coffee table and a real heavy cherry-eating set. Washing machine and dryer, flat screen TV. I had 3 flat screen TVs, Playstation 3, Wii, tablets, call it. We had everything. She went out of the recipe and started buying pills on the street. Finally, inject the drug. Whoa, this is a big step from oral intake to inject the drug. Joy was a nurse and she knew better, but I think she couldn't stop herself. Apparently, the drug gives you a great high when you sniff or inject. Much better than heroin, as one of the drug addicts put it. Be vigilant with drugsThis cautionary tale shows that life is weak and it can fall apart very quickly if you are not vigilant. Drug abuse can very quickly sabotage your life and finances. Luckily, I never had to take strong painkillers. Now that I know more about prescription drug abuse, I will be even more careful and avoid opiate drug as much as possible. Ruining your life is not the current high. Once you become addicted, you are a slave to the drug. The junkies on the show would do anything to get another pill. It sounds pretty crazy. Personally, I'm pretty sure I can avoid drug abuse. I'm 42 and I'm not addicted to any drugs, so I think I can hold it together. I'm actually more worried about my child. Many children abuse prescription drugs to feel good, gain an advantage at school or lose weight. Once you start this path, it would be very difficult to recover. We need to discuss this with our child when he or she is older and make sure he understands the consequences of drug use. We see a lot of homeless people every day, so he already knows that life is nuphemist son. Drug abuse is something that can ruin your life very quickly. What other problems do we need to avoid? Who cares about sharing their experiences with prescription drug abuse? Image of Ano LobbThe following two tabs change the content below. Email update: Sign up to receive new articles by email We hate spam just as you know they say: When it rains, does it pour? Well, it looks like we're getting all sorts of soaks here for the third time this month, uh... First we had our water heater debacle, where we had to replace the whole dang thing, then our main bathroom had to be gutted and restored from its shape (pictures coming soon!), and NOW bathroom #2 looks like a fool here :(I feel like someone is trying to tell us something? How: GET OUT NOW!! What are they??? Jeez... exactly when I started to think, maybe I could do this home ownership thing... And do you know what the sad part is?? This new problem is likely to be Masked! But we never knew, because we rarely shower in our own guest bath (and rarely also have overnight visitors, sad face :(). So when we started using it while our main bathroom got its entire makeover, you can imagine our surprise when we realized that there were puddles all over the ground floor leaking!! I couldn't believe it. Two bathrooms broke at exactly the same time, which is a What made it worse was that my very first thought, as always, was that Mr. Bob would reappear :(Which only relived memories of his death in my state of emptying. I wasn't a happy person that day. But at the same time, what are you going to do right?? You can revel all day and night as long as you want, but it never changes the circumstances at all (which of course sucks), and at some point you just have to soak up everything and deal with it. So, after a few hours of muttering curse words to me and long, sun-soaked walks to get my head free, we called our craftsman back and asked (yet) for another bathroom estimate. This time in the amount of about 700 dollars (the pipes AND drywall need to be repaired). We still have to plan everything, but I expect in a few days we will just tear down the Bandaid and hopefully finish it once and for all. And maybe this time we'll sneak in one or two more estimates – which we didn't do much last time. In the meantime, I'm staying away from all the other showers in this house :(We still have one on the unbroken list in my blogger basement (although I should probably check on this one while I'm there?) and if this one $hit I think I'd just lose it here... Which wouldn't be good if our baby comes in 5 weeks! Can you imagine how miserable it could have been if everything had happened at the same time? Ouch. But how great is that?! Our little boy will be out in 5 more weeks!! Yes!!!! This house can crumble as long as it wants, but it will never take the joy of our soon-to-be newborn. Only gotta focus on these :) And I have the feeling that the little bogeyman will put a lot more things into perspective – I'm ready for it. _____ (Sad clown by Mel B) Jay loves to talk about money, collect coins, blow up hip-hop and hang out with his three beautiful guys.
