Before we start discussing the various tools to help you track your loved one, let's quickly make it clear that you need to have some important identifying information at hand to do so. This information includes: Your loved one's full legal name (first, middle and last)Their date of birthThe condition they are kept inNotes that some tools may suggest or require additional information from you about your loved one, depending on individual circumstancesAs we go through this list, we will make clear what this information is, and where it applies. Now, for the prisoner location tools. As we've said, the BOP's search tool only shows results for federal prisoners. To find an inmate held in a local prison or a state prison, you will need the government website. State prisons can vary in their process. A common process to find your loved one can be seen with some examples: Here's what you need if your loved one is incorporated into York: Note that the Department ID Number or New York State ID Number is meant to be used on their In other words, if you include one of these numbers, you don't need to include the prisoner's name and birth year. Similarly, to find an inmate in California, you need to enter their full legal name or their inmate number if you know it: While most states offer the ability to search for an inmate on their official government website, others use a third-party search tool, which we'll discuss in the next section. The Bureau of Prisons allows you to search its database of federal inmates to track your loved one and uncover their contact information. Note that this database only includes inmates held in federal prisons — we'll get to smaller prisons and prisons in an instant. The BOP's database also includes information about prisoners released, dating back to 1982. When using the BOP's search tool, you can search by name or through a variety of identification numbers to an inmate. First, let's look for a prisoner with their name: Once again, looking for a common name without any additional information results in a large number of search results. Also note that the search engine limits the number of results to 100 — meaning a bunch of other inmates named John Smith didn't even show up. Obviously, it's not likely you're facing this problem, but it's definitely good to know. Anyway, you can also narrow down your search by including your loved one's race, age, and sex. Since this search tool doesn't offer any advanced search features, you should include this information to see less than 100 results. You can also search for a federal inmate using a number of different identification numbers, such as: BOP Register Number CDCDC Number FBI Number INS Number Because these identification numbers naturally belong exclusively to your loved one, using this method is the best way to generate accurate results from the BOP's website.
