Fresno night crawler

What cryptid are you? Click to take the test.
Nightcrawler Fresno, also known as the Fresno alien, is a cryptid that has made two appearances so far, one in Fresno, California and the other in Yosemite National Park, also in California. In both appearances, it is only seen in the videos. However, a man in Poland also claimed to have seen the creature. They say it looks like the Carmel Creature.
Observation Carmel Creature Zone
Main article: Carmel Area Creature Witness, a 60-year-old former Marine who was to be named and his wife were driving near Carmel on December 12, 2014, when they climbed a hill and saw a 7' tall, gray creature now known as Carmel Area Creature. The anonymous witness said the following:
I recently bought a place in the Fort Hill area (in southeastern Highland County). I noticed for the first time after about 30 days of life here that we suddenly have a perfect circle that remains fresh green, regardless of the weather, in our front yard.
Friday night (12), I was driving home. After we returned to Carmel Road, which leads to our road, we went around the curve of Carmel Church and then up a small slope and about 10 feet across the slope and in front of our truck, the stranger ran across the road and into the woods. There have been many possible sightings of Nightcrawler in the form of the creature from the Carmel area, a thin, armless white humanoid creature seen in Ohio
Nightcrawlers
The creature was also spotted in Yosemite, where the images were taken again from what appears to be another security camera. This time there are two creatures, one being very small (less than 0.5 meters), and the legs of the creatures can be clearly seen. As well as what seems to be a kind of straps connected from the knee to the upper body on at least. The cryptid was also filmed in Poland, this time by what appears to be a portable camera judging by the trembling of the images. The creature can't be seen for long, but it appears to have features similar to the largest recorded in Yosemite.
Explanations
An extraterrestrial or extraterrestrial being. A new species. Possibly a primate with short arms. A deer misidentified in the upright position. Pants and/or a doll on a wire
A bird walking like a crane. A person wearing large pants and walking on stilts
Description
Fresno nightcrawlers appear to be relatively short creatures (approx. 1.5 meters), with most of their height being made up of their legs because they possess an extremely small upper body. It is hard to find details in the upper part of the cryptid body because of the poor quality of its images. It is an extremely thin white humanoid with no perceptible arms. A Larger seems to have straps connected from each knee to the torso. The cryptids appear to have very short, thin legs and stilts. It's hard to judge exactly cryptids in the film due to poor quality.
Carmel Area Creature is tall and gray, with probably no arms and long, muscular legs. It's biped and goes in a strange way with its knees back bending. Looks like Fresno Nightcrawler.
Origins
While there have been claims that they are part of Native American folklore in the region, this has been debunked. The first sighting of a Fresno nightcrawler took place in Fresno, California, by a man named Jose. Jose had a surveillance camera looking at the front lawn and looked at the camera when he heard a dog barking.
Media
The Fresno Nightcrawler is best known for being one of two video cases featured on the second episode of Syfy's Fact or Faked: Paranormal Files. The team found Nightcrawler inexplicable. It's also now considered a fun urban legend and an endearing addition to pop culture pranks
Some of the sightings are actually a pair of white pants being the puppet, hence a hoax.
The GIF alley of Nightcrawler Fresno was created by youtuber Captain Disillusion walking down an alley with a melon and then using digital manipulation to remove the top half of his body, his goal to demonstrate how easily cryptid videos can be faked.

According to Fresno Bee, the first sighting of these confusing outpatients was captured by an anonymous Fresnan on a security camera in the front yard in 2007. Said the citizen brought the film to Univision in the hope of finding answers, but it was left unsataunted. From there, the video made its way to paranormal investigators, eventually wounding up in the hands of the SyFy Fact docuseries or Faked: Paranormal Files, which brought the possibility of independent pedestrian pants to the masses and deemed them unconfirmable. Since then, the original Fresno Nightcrawler film has gone viral, racking up more than a million views on YouTube. Several videos, generally despecifically falsified variety, have emerged over the years, and sightings of creatures have been reported in such far and exotic local as Poland and a little further west in California. Possible current explanations appearances, as listed by Wiki Cryptid, include an extraterrestrial being, a primate with short a misidentified gazelle standing upright, and, most importantly, pants.

When a tough, no-nonsense 60-year-old Marine tells you he's seen an alien, you tend to set you up and listen. According to this Native Ohio, the creature had long, muscular legs, no jaw, no face, no hands, and knees that seemed to bend back. According to the Marine, the creature leaned forward and was in pursuit. Many argue that this is the first sighting of Nightcrawler Fresno. The creature has been called an alien insectoid, seeming to walk like an arachnid, with legs resembling a long-legged spider. Also known as Pholcidae, these cellar spiders walk ginger, which is exactly what each of the nightcrawler videos exhibited. Reports say that the creature 3-4 feet tall also resembles a prayer nun.
What is a Cryptid?
A cryptid is a living animal, breathing (or yokt Fiptes) that is not usually considered to exist, although it can. Examples include the Loch Ness Monster, Bigfoot and the Nightcrawler creature, among others. Famous cryptids from around the world include:
Ahool: Indonesia giant beat
The Ningens: Japan's high-dwelling cryptid
Altamaha-ha: Georgia USA giant river monster
Dobhar-chú: Ireland's legendary water-dog or oron
Orang Pendek: Sumatra's little bigfoot
Jersey Devil: New Jersey's massive, Two-legged, winged dragon-sheep
Macinguari: Brazil double-mouthed bear with Olgoi-khorkhoi scales: Mongolia massive venom-spit gut-worm
There are also Momo, Shuck, Tessie, Yowie and many more.

Jose and Alien NightCrawler
In 2010, a man named Jose, who has since died, allegedly recorded a pair of short, armless, two-legged, walking creatures through the backyard. They moved slowly and methodically, seeming calm and quiet. As they gracefully crossed the landscape, they seemed to slide onto the grass. Several paranormal investigators, scientists and experts analyzed the images, noting that it would be difficult to reproduce. That said, video analyst and debunker Phil Poling, known through his YouTube channel, ParaBreakdown appears to have cracked the code. Phil and his team were able to create a video of characters that appear to be very similar to Jose's aliens. Jose's video quality was poor because the film was recorded using older security cameras with VHS cassette output. Not only were the images poorly compressed, pixelated, and covered with visual noise, it turns out that it was a recording from a TV playing video. This is the only version of the video to be popularized by the media.
Yosemite Nightcrawler
In March 2011, it was reported that caretakers in Yosemite National Park had installed cameras
Vandals when two biped creatures, humanoid appeared from the brush and meandered through the trees. Similar to the physical structure of the stranger Fresno, these creatures looked as if they were wearing loose, skin-like clothing. When video professionals analyzed the images, they said they could be easily reproduced with CGI animation and two pairs of stilts. Regardless, conspiracy theorists love filming, and MUFON members, The Mutual UFO Network, seem to be divided on the idea that Nightcrawler is a real creature.
Questions about Nightcrawler
When fact-checkers at Parabreakdown tried to duplicate these videos, they said they took three attempts before creating a video that perfectly mimicked Nightcrawler videos. To prove their point, they used a canvas doll, strung a wire between two points, then pulled the creature from one location to another. They used video noise and compression techniques to filter the wires and make them look very scary.
When you review Parabreakdown's video, it looks like a perfect reproduction of the creatures in Jose's original video.
Native American myths and DMV sculptures
While some conspiracy theorists have tried to reach into Native American lore to find aliens similar to Nightcrawler, there is no apparently exact match. The Yokuts, Miwok and Ohlone peoples are among the tribes that were discussed. When exploring Algonquian folklore, Wendigo or Windigo is a mythical evil spirit found in various forests and lake regions of the U.S. and Canada. While this creature has long, lanky, monstrous arms, it also has a full trunk, head, and antlers.

In Navajo folklore, there are creatures known as skin-walkers, which represent the antithesis to the ancient Navajo teachings. A skin-walker is known to be a dangerous witch who can turn into a wild beast or possess an animal or a person. While skin-walkers can take many forms, there is no real link between the folklore related to Navajo and the Nightcrawler phenomenon. Several sources have reported that a DMV in California has put on display the artwork that is representative of the Fresno Nightcrawler creature. These tall wooden representations were made of tree trunks and appeared to be armless and headless, similar to the two-legged Nightcrawler. The challenge here is that there is no proven link between artwork and any ancient myths or reported observations.
Nightcrawlers and Collective Consciousness
When legends gain a firm foundation in public consciousness, they begin to assume a life of their own. Because most people want to believe that there are aliens and other creatures that live among us, they will their imagination to run wildly and beyond the limits of reality. Since the early 1930s, millions of images representing extraterrestrial life have been evoked and Public. It is likely that, from this conceptualized image, the collective consciousness formed a consensus around the sizes of the eyes, legs, faces and more, for a variety of species, some real, some fanciful. While there is certainly strong evidence of strangers visiting us and living among us, we must remain critical of videos and images that are mindlessly sprinkled over the blogosphere. Our collective imagination has no end. While many other stories of foreign visits seem to be authentic, Nightcrawler Fresno does not have street credit for being among them. There are problems with this legend, especially since there are much more fantasy representations of the creature than first-hand reports and videos. The Nightcrawler Cryptid is becoming increasingly popular around the world, mainly because inspired artists post their renderings on social media. Some of the Nightcrawler renderings appear to be outrageous and frightening, while others are cuddly and cute. Searching the web, you'll find representations of armless wonder in thousands of illustrations, gifs, animated sequences, stickers, hand-stitched needles and pillows, puppets and dolls, either on display or for sale. Artwork is popping up everywhere. These creepy crawls continue to be marketed and celebrated in a variety of countries and languages. It's a miracle this seemingly benign creature doesn't currently have its own Hollywood franchise. Franchise.
