Before it introduced independent censorship in each state, it meant that different films could be banned, cut or displayed to varying degrees in different parts of the country. This caused a lot of hostility towards censors from within the industry as shown by this newspaper published in October 1922 by PhotoPlay magazine. It describes the censorship as ruthlessly mutilated, stunning and destructive. There is not a single reasonable argument in favor of censorship of any kind - and will never be... There is no reason for censorship and it will never be anything but intolerance. Censorship is the Klu Klux Klan hooded by art. The same article gives examples of scenes where children's clothes are torn out of movies because they hint at the act of creating children, and even Treasure Island is banned in Ohio because censors fear it could teach piracy to children. The protection of public morality in the 1910s and 20s was a very regional thing. I'm not going allowed to refer to the birth of a child or mention of ina senseless in Pennsylvania, showing cigarettes in Kansas, showing girls bathing in New York or Kansas, or even acknowledging that feminine limbs exist in most states. And as murderous descriptions, arson or kissing. You should be so lucky! Click To Tweet The Hays Code (also known as motion picture production code) clamps down on all of this and provides a strict nationwide set of rules for the film industry. Prohibited things include profanity (not even mild swearing allowed), licentious or suggestive nudity, drugs, white slavery, willow disease, childbirth, and ridicule of cyps, among other things. There are also very specific rules about what is acceptable in relation to any type of threat, violence, sexuality or crime. The code was introduced at the beginning of the decade but was not strictly enforced until 1934, which is why Bird of Paradise and The Sign of the Cross (below) could slip through the grid. Here are some of the more shocking or salacious films that make it into production before Code cracked down on pretty much everything! Cleopatra (1917) I think all of Cleopatra's on-screen film was a visual feast, but no one was quite as risque as the 1917 silent film starring Theda Bara. With costumes barely covering his fortune, the film was a huge commercial success but has since sadly lost. After hays code was made, the film was judged too obscene to be screened. You can see more of Theda Bara's amazing Cleopatra costumes here. A Daughter of the Gods (1916) A Daughter of the Gods is a silent film starring actress and swimming star Annette Kellerman. It is the first film to include a nude scene of a big star, although her nudity has been covered (to a certain extent) by her long hair. The film was a major production and one of the first films to cost $1 million to make. It is thought that about 20,000 people were employed in its production. The film is now considered lost, as with so many films from the moment, but a series of stills exist from the film including Kellerman's risque image from her nude scene below. Hula (1927) Hula was one of Clara Bow's last silent films before she moved to talkies. She plays a powerful controversial character who wears trousers and seduces a married man who has loved her (by performing a sexy hula dance for him), but the biggest scandal is caused by a scene at the beginning of the film where she swims naked (see publicity photo below). The Branding Iron (1920) The Branding Iron is a controversial film in many ways. It to the subject of a frenzied jealous husband who named his wife to show that she was his property. However, this is not the part that censors oppose. The shower scene below was cut from the film and the film itself was later banned because of it with the topic of insanity. I personally think the idea of branding your wife is shocking rather than an affair or a skinny dip, but what do I know.? Bird of Paradise (1932) This film shocked moderators with a nude shower scene by major movie star Dolores del Rio. Despite having nudity and a great storyline (see plot summary below) the film lost about $250,000 at the box office. When a yacht sails into a chain of islands in the South Pacific, a large number of indigenous people in float boats sail out to greet them. The indigenous people diving for the yacht's crew jewelry threw them. A shark arrives, frightening most indigenous people. In an attempt to catch a shark by throwing it the bait that has been attached to a harpoon-sized hook, Johnny Baker (Joel McCrea) accidentally enters a tightening loop around his ankle. The shark took the bait, and the rope grew tighter, causing the rope to pull the youth into the sea. Luana (Dolores del Rio), the leader's daughter, saves her life by jumping into the water and cutting rope. Not long before they met in the middle of the night. Quickly in love, they discovered she had been promised by her father to another man - a prince on a nearby island. A wedding is arranged with an intricate dance sequence afterwards. Johnny appears at Nick's time, running into a circle of fire, rescues her as the native kneels on fire. They travel to another island where they hope to live the rest of their lives. He built her a house with a roof of thatbird grass. However, their idyll was smashed when the local volcano on her home island began to erupt. She confesses to her lover that she alone can soothe the mountain. Her men brought her back. When Johnny chases after her, he is wounded in the shoulder by a spear and tied up. People decide to sacrifice both of them to the volcano, but along the way, the couple are rescued by Johnny's friends and taken on a yacht. Johnny's wounds are in tendency, but his friends wonder what will become of the lovers. Luana doesn't fit into Johnny's world. While Johnny is asleep, Luana's father asks her to return. She is willing, 40 years old, to believe that only she can save her people by voluntarily throwing herself into the crater. Source The Sign of the Cross (1932) This Roman art of Cecil B. DeMille was released before the stricter code was enforced, and contains scenes including seductive, a pornographic gay 'Dance of the Naked Moon', gladi gladi fighters and a scene including naked women being sacrificed by wild animals in a gladiate boxer arena (below). These scenes were cut after 1934 but added in more recent releases. Soul Auction / Devastated Armenia (1919) This last film is quite different on the subject for the usual censored films that prohibit the use of nudity for Auction of Souls depicts the 1915 Armenian genocide of the Ottoman Empire written by a survivor of brutality. It has been cut by censors, particularly a scene involving crucifixion and nudity or women but is still shown to vast cinema audiences in an effort to raise awareness and support for the oppressed minority.
