Patrick turner md

First appeared: Season 1 Played by: Stephen McGannDr. Patrick Turner is the general practitioner in Poplar. Deeply caring and highly respected, he shares a good working relationship with the nuns and nurses. Turner is a former smoker and rarely drinks. Widower, he was raising his son Timothy alone. In season 2, Dr. Turner's professional relationship with Sister Bernadette blossomed into a kind of more personal nature, and at the beginning of Season 3 they married. Turner and Shelagh accepted Shelagh's infertility and adopted their daughter Angela. Their marriage was tested when it was revealed to Shelagh that he was hiding a nervous breakdown from his past. Turner has taken on his role in prescribing Thalidomide badly and goes out of his way to support families whose lives will be forever affected by his legacy. Season 8 sees Dr. Turner introducing new medical programs for Poplar, including a Cervical Defamation Clinic, a Brook Advisory Center, and a measles test. Q&A with Stephen McGannTell us about entering the sixties. 1962 is almost my living memory. I love the '60s, but we're not miniskirts yet and we rock! In 1962 we are about to catch the Beatles, we are beginning to stretch as a nation, and the war has finally drifted to a distance where we can begin to find a new England on ourselves. For the Turners and for Patrick, this era is going to have some good - let's say - stylistic changes. There will be changes in their lives that will reflect the period. Over and over again we find that when we show problems that affect women and society at that time, they are not necessarily well known to the people who watch now. It's up to us to bring them back to the current mind, to make them clear. If you had to give birth to a real baby do you think you could do it? If I had to give birth to a real baby, I think I'd handle it pretty badly! I haven't learned anything since I started calling the midwife. Our wonderful midwife councillor Terri Coates is looking back on me. If you had to play someone else, who would you play? I'd like to be Fred, the do-it-all, I think he's a genius. One minute he's a fun figure and the next minute he's involved in a really moving moment. If Fred is moved, we will all be moved. Fred is our meter in the world, and if he gets sad, we all get a little sadder - then we root for him in a really nice way. I would also like to be Monica Joan's sister, because I want the right to say some of these wild and poetic things! And the cake is important, it's a breaker for me. Lastly, I would like to be the majority of babies on the show because they are treated like the real stars. No one on Earth is treated better than a baby Call the Midwife. What's it been like watching Max/Timothy grow up on set? It's been. Been. a privilege for us to watch. The public can also watch the natural progression of a young child growing up in this difficult teenage phase. Max is responding now, but he is also wise and funny. Sometimes we need to hear it! What's it like filming with Alice, who plays Angela? It's very humiliating when you're working on a successful series where real stars are kids! No matter what your plans are as a self-important actor, they are second to the needs of the child actor, and I think this is very healthy. Alice is brilliant and adorable! When she reacts to the lines, she steals the scene. What impact has Call the Midwife had that you're most proud of? I am immensely proud of the fact that this show not only entertains, but helps inform and even sometimes educate. The program recently helped a program that teaches good delivery practices in Bangladesh. It also relied on information about vaccination and the spread of certain diseases that has encouraged people to vaccinate their children. Dramas like Call the Midwife have the power to help people do more than just take a glass of wine and leave their minds adrift. I am very proud of its continued success as a form of medical communication. What makes call the midwife so globally successful? Everyone can recognize themselves in it. It's about love, life, passion and family. It's about the things in life that everyone understands. It's not a new world, it's their world and it's our world. Describe your character in three words. Enthusiastic, flawed and good. Excited, because of how much he is a brand of fire, always trying to make things better. He loves his job and never stops. I fail, because he's not a perfect person, he makes mistakes. Finally, good, because at the end of the day he is a representative of ordinary doctors everywhere, trying to do the best they can. I've had GPs come up to me and say We really like Turner because he's tired, and scared, and some days he can barely continue, but he'll still try to go further. It is the kindness that comes from ordinary people doing extraordinary things for the best reasons. That's what doctors are to me, and that's what I hope they identify with. Shelagh Mannion Turner (wife)Marianne Parker Turner (first wife, deceased) Dr Patrick Turner is a GP who works closely with the midwives and nurses who care for poplar's poorest district. He is first introduced at the end of the pilot episode, arriving at a patient's house shortly after she gave birth prematurely and suffered subsequent bleeding. He is played by Stephen McGann. Overview[edit | editing source] Dr. Turner was born in Liverpool, the son of a blacksmith and his wife, and served as a doctor in World War II. In Series Three, it is revealed that he a mental breakdown in 1945, which required a stay of five months a psychiatric hospital. Some time after the war, Dr. Turner married and had a son, Timothy, and began working with the nuns and midwives of House Nonnatus. According to the 2012 Christmas Special, Mrs Turner passed away sometime in 1957, leaving behind Patrick and his son, Timothy. Although he is a good father to his son and tries his best to give Timothy time, his duties providing advanced care for poplar's growing East End district often take away from his domestic duties. Nonnatus' people take notice, and Trixie, at one point, mentions that Timothy seems a little dishy and that Dr. Turner's clothes need to be repaired, although he doesn't have time to take them to a seamstress and has no wife to help him. During Series Two, she agrees that Sister Bernadette has more feelings for the doctor than appropriate for a nun. The first incident is when she secretly fixes the missing button on his lab coat for him. At another point, during the birth of Maeve Carter's twins, her twin Meg broke into the delivery room and pushed his sister away and slapped Sister Bernadette as they tried to save her mother and baby, due to her mistaken belief that they meant Maeve's evil. Turner was enraged, and when the babies were delivered safely, he and his sister stood on the streets to catch their breath. While smoking a cigarette, he praised her for her resilience during the hectic birth and the battle of wills with Meg. He offers her a cigarette, to which Sister Bernadette answers only a breath. She and the doctor share a small moment, where Dr. Turner seems to have some feelings for her before returning to The Nonnatus House. During a party where Dr. Turner is expected to participate with his son in a three-legged race, Dr. Turner is called when a woman dies after a badly done abortion. In her place, Sister Bernadette pairs up with Timothy and wins, although they stumble at the finish line and make a bad cut in Sister's hand. She walks into Nonnatus to clean it up, and Dr. Turner comes to see if she'd like him to take a look. While inspecting his hand, he is overwhelmed with his long affection and kisses his hand. Sister Bernadette immediately walks away, and Dr. Turner apologizes immediately. She replies that he should not repent and that it was not an unforgivable offense to her, but she turns away by her vows to God. And if I didn't respect that, I wouldn't deserve to live. Turner responds before leaving. After treating many patients for tuberculosis, Dr. Turner confides to Sister Julienne that he is reaching out to those affected too late because they don't even know they were carrying the disease. At Sister Julienne's insistence, he commissions the health department with Sister Bernadette, and with his passionate, a portable x-ray van is scheduled to come to Poplar. Sister Sister it is revealed to have the disease and is sent to recover in a sanatorium. After realizing that she fell in love with Sister Bernadette, Dr. Turner sends many letters, although she cannot read them, much less answer them. Patrick's spirits are shone when he discovers that she is keeping in touch with the other women of Nonnatus. After a conversation with Sister Julienne about her place with the Order, Sister Bernadette responds to a letter Timothy sent her and adds a post-script to Dr. Turner, saying that she will respond to her letter in due course. Realizing that she is in love with Dr. Turner and wants a life outside of religious life, Sister Bernadette leaves the order and resumes her birth name: Shelagh. She calls Dr. Turner on the phone, saying that she is being released, and that she is no longer part of the religious order. He insists that he will take her in his car, but she replies that she will take the bus. Before they agree, Dr. Turner is called and Shelagh makes the walk to the bus. After taking care of your patients, dr. Turner and Timothy drive to the sanatorium and are informed that Shelagh made the trip to the bus stop. Looking for her, and arriving empty in the dense fog, Turner and her son finally came walking through the mist. Getting out of the car, Dr. Turner wraps her in her coat to warm her up and confesses his love for her, which she responds with her own statement. They finally reveal their first real names to each other. A short time later, he gives him a box, saying it's from me and someone else. Shelagh unwraps the wrapping paper and finds out you have the words Please, will you marry my father? written on it, and she and she says yes. They marry in the 2013 Christmas Special, however, Timothy is hit by polio, forcing them to postpone the wedding. Timothy has overcome his illness and the marriage goes ahead, although polio has damaged Timothy's legs and requires him to wear braces. After they get married, it is learned that due to tuberculosis healing his reproductive organs, Shelagh is unlikely to ever have a child of his own, although Patrick is not as disturbed by the outcome as his wife. Thus, Shelagh seeks adoption, only for Patrick to reconsider when he realizes how thorough the questions are. Although Patrick tries to drag his feet and avoid going through the adoption agency, Shelagh persists. The reason for Patrick's reluctance is thus revealed: the adoption process found that he went through a mental breakdown after World War II. A feud grows between Patrick and Shelagh when the truth comes out in front of the adoption people, who insinuate that Turners are not proper adoptive parents. However, when the adoption society comes into contact with them, they report that they are considered adoptive parents although the rift still persists. Soon, Patrick apologizes to his wife about maintaining his mental past hers, and Shelagh forgives him though she cannot forget him. After a teenage girl's parents change their minds about keeping their grandson, a girl is put up for adoption, and Patrick and Shelagh are chosen first. Arriving at the agency, Patrick and Shelagh enter the nursery to meet their son, but Shelagh is nervous, saying that this is the end she will get to childbirth. Patrick goes first to the crib, and crying, Shelagh asks what she's like? Patrick tells her to close her eyes and hold her arms. He takes the newborn to his wife and puts her in his arms saying here's his mummy. The Turners name their baby, Angela Julienne Turner. In Series 4, Patrick prescribes a pregnant woman suffering from extreme morning sickness Distaval, a pill that will prevent her from vomiting 40-50 times a day. One of the key ingredients for the effectiveness of the drug, however, is Thalidomide, which would later be revealed to cause significant malformation of limbs for babies whose mothers took the drug during pregnancy. He also begins to question his own skills as a doctor when he has a boy removed from the care of his Christian scientists parents who refused to give him medicine as it was against his faith and both were under suspicion of physically abusing him, but when a foster carer brought the baby and explained that he had suffered a fracture despite the utmost care Patrick realizes that the baby suffers from imperfect osteogenesis , an extremely rare and fragile bone disease and feels guilty for not thinking about it before. He soon gets sick and Shelagh takes over the surgery for him with the help of Nurse Mount. When Nurse Gilbert and Sister Mary Cynthia realize that one of their patients is suffering from diffrhesis and is struggling to breathe, Mary Cynthia asks Patrick for help. Having regained his belief in his abilities thanks in part to gifts received from his grateful patients, he rushes to the scene and performs an emergency tracheotomy on the woman and saves her life. In Season 5, when Poplar babies are beginning to be born with malformed limbs, Patrick tries to figure out why, which remains a mystery until the end of the season. At the same time, Timothy, who read in a medical journal that smoking cigarettes can cause lung cancer, causes his parents to give up. Patrick is not entirely true to the goal, and only for when he catches Timothy stealing a cigarette. Later, Tim reveals that it was a reverse psychology method to get Patrick and Shelagh serious about giving up. When Shelagh receives the news that Distaval, a drug they were prescribing to Poplar's women, was withdrawn due to its effects on fetuses, she and Patrick are angry and distraught. Patrick starts smoking again, and Turner feels incredibly responsible for the babies in Poplar who were born Patrick still feels guilty for his part in the thalidomide scandal in the 2016 Christmas special in which he and Shelagh accompany a Nonnatus House party to Apartheid-era South Africa to help save a mission hospital struggling from closure. Patrick's confidence takes another blow when a boy brings his polio-stricken brother to be vaccinated, but Patrick says the vaccine won't help because the boys already had the disease. Myra Fitzsimmons, who helps run the clinic, suddenly falls ill and becomes convinced she has liver cancer. Patrick is convinced that her diagnosis is wrong, but is unable to examine Dr. Myra, as she will not allow him to stay close to her until Shelagh convinces her to let her husband examine her. Patrick determines that Dr. Myra has an abscess and drains it, but Dr. Myra's health continues to deteriorate. Patrick gains hope when he learns of an experimental drug that can save Dr. Myra's life, and he and Shelagh take her to a General Hospital. Myra gradually recovers and Patrick regains his self-belief and gives the black boy polio apparatus to timothy to help him walk. Upon returning to Poplar, Shelagh discovers that she is pregnant, and she gives patrick the news in a way that mirrored the way he asked her to marry him: she drew a baby in the womb and wrote the caption Please, will you be my father?. Patrick is delighted. In the fourth month of pregnancy, Shelagh discovers that her underwear is bloody, and she is hospitalized, fearing a possible miscarriage. Fortunately, when Patrick hears his stomach, they are relieved to find that not only is the baby still alive, but has a strong and steady heartbeat. After Shelagh gets home, she and Patrick realize that their apartment is too small for three children and agree to move house. The Turners move into their new home in S06E06, but before leaving their apartment, Patrick surprises Shelagh by revealing that he had secretly kept all of Angela's baby stuff. Unfortunately, a confusion of addresses results in their furniture being sent to Kent by mistake, and the family is forced to sit and sleep on the floor on their first night in their new home. In S06E08, Shelagh chooses Sister Julienne to be her midwife, and with Patrick supporting her, she gives birth to a son, whom she and Patrick baptize Edward Patrick Turner, or Teddy for short. In Season 7, the Turners hire a Hungarian au pair named Magda to help with the house's operation. But when Magda finds out she is pregnant, she steals some ergomethrin from The Nonnatus House to try to induce an abortion, but she ends up putting her own life in danger as a result. Magda survives, but her brush with death causes her to decide to become a nurse, and she leaves the Turner house go to study in Paris. In the 2018 Christmas Special, Patrick and Shelagh agree to promote May, a Chinese orphan whose adoptive parents are unable to her for a year as the father of the family has tuberculosis. At the end of season 8, May's adoption falls after her father's relapse, and Patrick and Shelagh drive to the Mother House in Chichester and bring her back.
