The producers of This Is Us hinted a while back that we would be spending a lot of time with Jack in Vietnam this season, and tonight's grueling episode certainly did well on that promise. Underlining Milo Ventimiglia and set entirely in the past, Vietnam is finally starting to fill some gaps when it comes to Jack's military service, and his relationship with his brother Nicky. There's been a lot to process, so here are six key things you may have missed. This content is imported from {embed-name}. You may be able to find the same content in a different format, or you may be able to find additional information on your website. NBC Kevin contacted a man named Mr. Robinson last week, asking for information about Jack. Tonight we met a young Don Robinson (Mo McRae), a soldier who served alongside Jack in Vietnam and shared a relationship with him with some good-natured rivalry. As soon as Don started talking about his post-Vietnamese dreams of playing baseball, you must have known something terrible was coming, and we're not sure we'll ever recover from Jack's handing Don his own severed leg.2 The wounded soldier Jack held at the season premiere wasn't Nicky. When Rebecca asks Jack about the war on their first date and he downplays how horrible it was by telling her he was 'just a mechanic, we saw a quick look at a bloodied Jack holding someone in his arms. Ever since that picture appeared just before he mentioned Nicky, many viewers assumed we'd seen a glimpse of his brother's death scene. But this episode contains a full version of this moment that sees Jack rocking Don after losing his That means we have no idea how Nicky's going to die, or if Jack's going to be there with him when he does, or if he's really dead. If this is something he taught us, it's questioning everything!3 It was Don who taught Jack how to breathe. One of the most moving recurring themes throughout the show was Jack teaching Randall how to breathe through his panic attacks-remembering gut-wrath scenes when Randall did the same for William in his dying moments? Unsurprisingly, Jack didn't learn this technique from his own father. Instead, he learned it from Don, who (even though he had just lost a limb) takes a while to comfort Jack when he is medically evacuated. You're scared, Pearson, says Don to Jack, asking if he'll ever get tired of acting like he's not having fun. In response, Don puts his hand on the side of Jack's face and tells him to breathe, and tells him: Sometimes we're so scared we're going to die, we forget to do the thing that keeps us alive. Jack apparently carried it with him, and a few years later he taught his son. It was so emotional! NBC 4. Jack wasn't called, but he volunteered to be with Nicky. Jack had a medical exception that meant he avoided the draft (more on that in a second), but Nicky's number appeared. Jack has always been incredibly protective of his little brother-Nicky only half-ironically refers to himself as Lois Lane to Superman Jack-so he immediately comes up with a plan to get Nicky to Canada to avoid going to war. But on the way, Nicky slips out of their motel room in the middle of the night and leaves a note explaining that he's not going to run away from the draft. Now it's my turn to save the day,' he writes. But Nicky still needs saving, at least as far as Jack is at. The letter comes from Nicky, who suggests he's not doing well in Vietnam - he's been disciplined and writes disturbing phrases like I know I can't get out of this place alive - so Jack has to go and find him. I just have to be where he is, even though I can't get to him, he tells his doctor. Even though there's nothing I can do for him, I just have to be there. He's my little brother. It's my job to take care of him. 5. Jack had a long history of heart problems before his sudden death. As we all know painfully, Jack wasn't directly killed by the house fire, but by a heart attack caused by smoke inhalation. And as it turned out, there were warning signs. Jack has had tachycardia (abnormally rapid heartbeat) since childhood, and it was hard enough to free him from the draft. Jack downplays the condition as harmless when he decides to enlist, but his doctor is clearly concerned. 6. Jack's father wasn't always a monster. NBC It was pleasant surprise, because Stanley Pearson was quite a one-note villain for most of the show. On the one hand, this episode offered much more painful details about how abusive Hie was to his wife and children, which made it clear that his violence was a big part of why Jack was so protective of Nicky. There's also a brutal scene in which Marilyn, Jack and Nicky's mom, greeted the postman with a very visible bruise over his eye. He wasn't always like that, Marilyn tells his sons after they both hit to physically protect her from Stanley. And it's true: In the memories of the day Nicky was born, Stanley is sweet and supportive, offering fatherly advice to Jack in the waiting room. The appearance of Stanley's own father in his hand suggests some of his demons — yet you have to wonder what on earth happened in the next two decades to make him such a horrible person.
