The best in show award is one of great subjection, especially when it comes to your own beloved dog-child. Our own dogs are woven into the fabric of our lives, causing us to laugh, cry, socialize (whenever we least want), and often create great inconveniences. But we love them, finding them to be the very best. While everyone's dog may win a very biased award for cuts and most loveable, these dogs have been and thing to be absolutely best at this one thing. Below, find if your dog's breed is the recipient of one of these awards. 1. Best sense of smell Bloodhounds has an excellent sense of smell. | Lakshmi3/Stock/Getty Images It was during the Middle Ages that selective breeding took place among sighthounds, and the purpose of it was very clear. What we now know as Bloodhounds, Beagles, Basset dogs and Foxhounds (to name a few) were all bred with the aim of becoming stellar hunting dogs. And they are. Research has shown that a Bloodhound scent receptors are 40 times larger than a human, making discoveries of a final admissibility in court. Next: This dog packs the strongest piece of all. 2. Strongest bite Kangal has a powerful bite. | SelcukJ/Stock/Getty Images A descendant of Mastiff, Kangal's jaw is a force to be reckoned with. While this guard dog is more well-known for being loyal and protective, its bite packs most punches. Measured by pounds per square inch (PSI), the power of a Kangal's bite register of 743 PSI. For reference, a Rottweiler powerful bite watches in at 328 PSI. On the upside of this, Kangal is also known to have a very gentle nature and attitude towards children. Next: This dog may be the ultimate fetcher, but it's the bark that wins the prize. 3. Loudest bark A golden retriever holds the record for loudest bark. | jonathandavidsteale/Stock/Getty Images For some reason, the loudest barking dog is always the one who doesn't seem to zip his snout. Surprisingly, it is the Golden Retriever holding current record for the loudest demercy dog. Second is German Shepherd. In this case, the bigger the dog really is the bigger the bark. While a Golden Retriever's ability to continuously retrieve the ball and its natural loyalty make for a spectacular family pet, it's the bark that wins the loudest award. Next: Who is the longest of them all? 4. Highest dog The Irish wolfhound is the highest among dogs. | Bigandt, Photography/Stock/Getty Images The origins of the Irish Wolfhound date back to 7000 B.C., and its purpose was important. From chasing down wolves to being solid hunting dogs, this breed has evolved into a much more relaxed lifestyle as a family pet. In terms of height, however, this dog also outshines the great Dane. A female usually measures about 30 inches in height, while the male can be as tall as inches. Next: The sharp vision of these dogs makes them excellent hunters. 5. Best Sight Whippets have excellent eyesight. | Onetouchspark/iStock/Getty Images Sighthounds include a variety of breeds that use their keen sight to hunt, instead of their sense of smell. Yet it is the mix of great runner with speed and agility that makes sighthounds the foremost hunting dogs. In addition, these dogs have extremely large chest cavities to properly hold their hearts and lungs. Common sighthound breeds are Greyhounds, Scottish Deerhounds, Borzois, and Whippets. Next: A 45-mph sprint makes this dog the winner. 6. Fastest German Greyhounds will win any race. | SvetaElfimova/Stock/Getty Images There is no doubt that Greyhounds are the fastest dogs on earth. After all, people will get everyone dressed up to place bets and watch to see if their dog will win the race. It's the dual extension gallop of Greyhounds that gets them compared to the pace and running style of a cheetah. This type of gallop allows the dog's paws (and cheetah) to touch the ground only 25 percent of the time. The athleticism of these dogs is really impressive. Next: How smart is your dog? 7. Most intelligent Poodle is extremely intelligent. | trettjak/Stock/Getty Image The bouffant is not the only thing the German-bred poodle has to go for itself. Not only is the poodle all the rage, but it's ultra-smart too. Bred for hunting and retrieval from water, poodle is considered a very intelligent and teachable breed of dog. The non-shedding coat added bonus points. Close to second on the intelligence race is Border Collie. Check out the Cheat sheet on Facebook! 1 in 30 Afghan Hound Cute and stupid, these adorable dogs originate in the mountainous region of Afghanistan. Their silky, fine fur served as protection against the cold at high altitudes, and it requires lots of grooming. 2 of 30 Alaskan Malamute By nature, malamutes are friendly to humans but quarrelsome with other dogs. They tend to be stubborn and are not easily trained, and they prefer to be outdoors. 3 out of 30 American Staffordshire Terrier People-oriented Am Staffs are both intelligent guardians and natural clowns. They can be a little strong-headed and do best when they are made part of the family. 4 out of 30 Belgian Malinois These shepherds are incredibly smart and loyal protectors, which explains why they are the preferred breed for the military and secret service. Understandably, Mals require plenty of exercise and stimulation, and they are happiest with a job to do. 5 out of 30 Bull Terrier Sheepdog Bright and loyal, these dogs worked during World War I as message carriers and ambulance dogs. Today shepherds are known to be versatile, good with children, and protective. 6 out of 30 Borzoi These worthy dogs, also known as Russian wolfhounds, are independent and surprisingly affectionate. Russian aristocracy bred them for hundreds of years to hunt - you guessed it - wolves, and they can reach speeds of up to 40 miles per hour. 7 of 30 Boxer Boxers are affectionate and loyal to the point of possessiveness. They are suspicious of strangers but make exceptions for children. They are very intelligent and willing to please. 8 of 30 Bull Terrier charming and mischievous, bull terriers may seem scary but they are actually extremely friendly, playful, and sometimes goofy. One more plus? The extremely short coat requires a little grooming. 9 of 30 Chesapeake Bay Retriever This dedicated and loyal companion craves personal attention. They will tolerate roughhousing from children, especially those who are willing to play. They tend to be sharper than other retriever races. 10 out of 30 Collie Collies exhibit the qualities of loyalty, intelligence and gentleness, and live up to her hero reputation from Lassie. A desire to please is hardwired into collie genetic makeup. They are easy to work out but tend to be very noisy. 11 out of 30 Curly-Coated Retriever Extremely intelligent, these retrievers are both hard workers and affectionate family dogs. When it comes to dense fur, the tight curls allow them to swim in cold water. 12 out of 30 Doberman Pinscher This alert watchdog is loving and loyal to its master but offers a challenge to strangers. Fast in body and mind, they can become hyperactive if deprived of vigorous exercise every day. Men can be aggressive, and obedience training can be a struggle. 13 out of 30 English Foxhound Bred to run in a pack for miles, these traditional hunting dogs have incredible stamina and a noble stake. They make for excellent hiking and jogging companions. 14 out of 30 English Setter English setters are both mellow and cheerful, and can be identified by their unique speckled coats. The dogs' gentle and affectionate behavior makes them big pets, but they require plenty of exercise. 15 of the 30 Flat-Coated Retriever Unsurprisingly, flat-coated retrievers are closely related to their more popular lab counterparts, but they have a longer fur coat and slimmer silhouette. Bright and eager-to-please, a flat-coat can easily become part of the family. 16 out of 30 German Shepherds Loyal, loving, obedient and protective, German shepherds can make wonderful pets if they are properly trained. Most form a very strong emotional bond with their owners. They tend to be high energy and must be exercised regularly. 17 out of 30 German Shorthaired Pointer GPs are even-hardened and sensible, but their boundless energy can become destructive if they are not given plenty of time to exercise. They are intelligent and very trainable. Most often this is a one-person dog. 18 out of 30 German Wirehaired Pointer Equally adept at Land and Water, these enthusiastic hunting dogs are both affectionate and eager. They are a little taller and heavier than their cousins, and of course possesses an adorable furry appearance. 19 of 30 Giant Schnauzer The super-size version of miniature and standard schnauzers, these dogs are fast learners, but also incredibly energetic. 20 of 30 Golden Retriever Fun-loving and playful, this family-friendly dog loves high energy activities. They are natural clowns, which makes them particularly good therapeutic dogs. Because of their high intelligence, they are often trained as assistance dogs. 21 out of 30 Gordon Setter Bigger than Irish or English setters, the Scottish breed is hardy and high energy, requiring exercise throughout the day. They may be a little stubborn, but are ultimately very dedicated and loyal. 22 out of 30 Greyhound Most people know greyhounds for their speed (they are the fastest dogs on the planet), but the born racers are also incredibly cute and charming. They have been prized as athletes and companions for thousands of years, dating back to the ancient Egyptians in 2900 B.C. 23 out of 30 Irish Setter Natural beauties, Irish setters have distinctive-red fur, but there is much more to them than a beautiful fur coat. The hunting dogs are also superb athletes who love long games of fetch. 24 of 30 Irish Water Spaniel These spaniels are both hard working and playful with a definite desire to please. While the curved coat may look a little silly, it is actually fully functional with water-repellent qualities. 25 of 30 Komondor Fun fact: plural of Komondor is Komondorok, due to the fact that this working dog originates from Hungary. Traditionally a sheepdog, Komondor is naturally protective and known for its strength and courage. The corded coat helped the keeper blend into the pack, but it also looks like an adorable mop! 26 of 30 Labrador Retrievers These family-friendly dogs are nonaggressive, eager to please, and outgoing. They appeal to many people for their gentle manner, intelligence and adaptability. 27 out of 30 Poodle Happy, lively, and playful, poodles make an excellent family dog for those who are prepared to keep the coat. They may possibly be the most intelligent dog breed and are willing to please, making them very easy to train. They are friendly, outgoing and loving. 28 of 30 Rhodesian Ridgeback Worthy and even-tempered, the breed is also known as the African lion dog because of its original purpose. Today ridgebacks are intelligent family protection and hunting partners. Namesake ridgeback appears where the hair grows forward along the spine. 29 out of 30 Saluki They may look sensitive, but salukis are surprisingly powerful and fast. The ancient Egyptian breed is perhaps the world's oldest domesticated dog. 30 out of 30 Weimaraner Bubbly and energetic, weimaraner can't stand to be limited and can be destructive if not given enough exercise. This single-family dog is not friendly to strangers and is considered too rambunctious for small They are is and determined, and education can be difficult. Difficult.
