Double shot at love winner

In Japan: The new Subaru Legacy won the Auto of the Year Japan award, beating the second-place finisher, the Toyota Prius, by a handy 46 votes. The third was the Mazda RX-8. Forty-eight Japanese-based auto journalists voted on the award. In Europe: Meanwhile, a 58-person jury in Europe chose fiat panda as their car of the year (Panda is the boxing thing pictured here). It offers electric windows and ABS for less than $10,000. VW Golf and Mazda 3 tied for second. The somewhat controversial new BMW 5 Series has scored a not-stellar sixth place. In India: India's largest automotive magazine, Overdrive (yes, there is probably more than one car magazine in India), chose the Ford Mondeo as its car of the year. Our man on the scene, contributor Ray Hutton, writes: They drive left in India, but you'd hardly know it because vehicles avoid each other and make up and washaways that would seriously damage any normal car. Driving along the test route required a steady nerve and constant use of the horn. Forget beauties like the veering poise and refinement of the engine-best car here will be the easiest to drive and most comfortable car that you could forget when dealing with chaos. Hotel on Wheels: The ultra-expensive Maybach from DaimlerChrysler doesn't exactly take the automotive world by storm, but it does seem to have a serious impression of the American Academy of Hospitality Sciences (yes, that's true-hotel people). The Academy awarded Maybach the Five Star Diamond award and declared it the Automobile of the Century. The more cynical among you may note that we are only into the fourth century and Maybach is technically not a hotel—but not us! Previous winners include the Beverly Hills Hotel and Le Cirque 2000 restaurant in New York.
