Photo Courtesy of ProRasslin.netWrestling legend chairman Jay Strongbow, who was the real name of Joseph Scarpa, died on Tuesday at the age of 83, according to ProWrestling.net. Strongbow was a struggler since his career began in 1947. Before joining WWE in 1970, Strongbo wrestled in the NWA territories and was a big draw for two decades. Many fans of today’s wrestling may not know much about Strongbow, but he had a hand in the development of many legendary wrestlers and did a lot of work in the ring that is still underway today. Strongbo was largely a tag team attraction in WWE because he won the belts four times with three different partners, but he was always a big fan favorite. Maybe Strongbo is gone, but it certainly won’t be forgotten. He undoubtedly left an undeniable mark on the ferry business in a few profound ways. WWE Hall of FameSay what you will about the WWE Hall of Fame being a joke due to the inclusions of Koko B. Ware, Pete Rose and Drew Carey, but the fact of the matter is that it is a tremendous honor to be inducted. There may still be a physical Hall of Fame, but it still makes a lot of sense to consider, as it makes a performer among the immortals. As for Strongbo, he was one of the first ways of inductiveness in 1994.Andre the Giant was the first inductive in the wake of his tragic death in 1993, but the first official class came in 1994, of which Strongbo was a part. Strongboo was inducted by Thtanka, which Strongbo managed at the time. Although there is no timeline set, there will inevitably be a real Hall of Fame that fans can one day visit, and Strongbow will be among the first plaques people see. Even if fans didn’t have the pleasure of seeing him wrestling, they could come to appreciate his unsizе success. Going on Warpathis always difficult to say how or where certain things originated on the ship, but a very common event in many competitions could easily be linked to chairman Jay Strongbow. As a figure, Strongbo always had the crowd behind him, and he often used it to his advantage. Most of the time when heels are getting better than he was, Strongbow is going on warpath. During this time, Strongbow was seemingly impermeable to the pain as he absorbed strikes, but continued to dance around the ring before finishing his opponent. This type of return sequence has been used by many years. The most notable is Hulk Hogan, who finishes most of his matches with Hulkng because he doesn’t drop his opponent’s fists without selling, eventually finishing the match with a big boot and a leg drop. While today’s comeback sequence is not pronounced as Strongbow, John Cena and many other top stars employ the signature motion sequence that they use every match. It would not be unfair to credit Strongbow with the advent of such a concept. India MatchIt clause may not be much used But Strongbow was a big reason for the popularity of india’s strap race. That type of race was often used to settle scores in the 1970s and 1980s, involving two wrestlers tied together by a strap, with the main goal of the match being to drag your opponent around the rim to touch all four corners. Although the strap race is still used on occasion, it’s certainly not as common as it once was. When you think about it, though, there are not many wrestlers in WWE history who are connected to a certain type of match. The Andertiker has hell in a Cell and Casket race but most matches can be linked to any number of competitors. Strongbow was the man when it came to indian strap competitions, however, and when you consider how outstanding clause matches were once, he deserves plenty of recognition. He portrayed a Native American wrestler wearing a war bonnet to the ring and headed for Warpath when fans began cheering him on against an opponent. [3] In reality, he was an Italian-American with a business mind. [4] Strongbo’s professional wrestling career began with his real name in 1947–1947. [1] He was a standout in the Georgia and Florida territories of the National Wrestling Alliance during the 1950s and 1960s, winning several championships and becoming a fan favorite. [1] In 1970– 1970, Scarpa began working for the Vincent J. McMbone World Wrestling Federation as president of Ji Strongbo, a native American gamemic complete with traditional address and native themed ship movement. [3] [5] He became hostile to the Golden Greek abbas of Spiros Arrione, the brave handsome Jimmy and superstar Billy Graham, and nearly won the WWWF World Heavyweight Championship. A memorable game against Iron Mike McCord featured Strongbow using his sleep hold. But McCord head coach Lou Albano intervened by banging a cast on the chief’s fore. Strongbow was previously alleged to have jumped Albano in the locker room and broke his arm. McCord was disqualified but Strongbo was interrupted by albano’s opening kicks. Strongbow settled scoring in front of a sold-out crowd at Madison Square Garden, beating le albano convincing . Strongbow picked up a win at Madison Square Garden in the summer of 1970, shortly after he entered wwwf, pinning top contender Crusher Verdue, who was managed by Le Albano. In 1975, he began feudal with Spiros Arian. Arrior, who was the face of a popular and seemingly unbeatable infant, returned to WWWF after his absence and teamed up with Strongbow. Arian turned on Strongbow and destroyed his address on Philadelphia TELEVISION after he tied Strongbo in the ropes and rubbed feathers in his face. Ariane was already heeled, and Pin Strongbow was in the Eastern Arena as he went on to challenge champion Bruno Sammartino. Strongbo won his first wwwf world tag team championship on May 22, 1972 with partner Sonny King. [6] They defeated Baron Michael Cyclona and King Curtis Iaoke. [6] Strong Bo and King won the title for a month before losing it to Mr. Fuji’s team and Professor Toro Tanaka on June 27. [6] Four and a half years later, on December 7, 1976, Strongbo won his second wwwf world tag team championship, this time with partner Billy White wolf. [6] The team won the title in a three-team tournament, defeating executioners Nikolai Volkov and Tor Kamata. [6] Their reign was shortened in August 1977 when the belts were emptied due to White wolf and suffered neck injuries at the hands of Ken Patra’s swinging full Nelson. [3] In 1979, he feuded with valentine’s hammer wolf, which broke Strongbow’s leg. The two wrestled across the WWF circuit, including an Indian Strap Race at Madison Square Garden on July 30, 1979. [3] NWA Detroit / Big Time Wrestling (1976) Strongbow also competed for The Sheik’s Big Time Wrestling promotion in Detroit. He had a monumental feud with Bulldog Don Kent, who culminated in a shark cage match in 1976. Strongbow and Kent fought inside a small shark cage and the first man to escape was declared the winner. With the help of fellow fan favourite Mark Levine, Strongbow was able to escape the victorious shark cage. NWA Georgia / Mid-Atlantic and other territories (1980-1981) After wrestling in the WWF for 9 years, Strongbow went to work for Georgia Championship Wrestling and Mid-Atlantic Championship Wrestling. In Detroit he once again feuded with Don Kent. Then he feuded with Baron von Beshke in Georgia. On October 11, 1980, he won the WWE Caribbean heavyweight championship in Puerto Rico, defeating Luke Graham. He then dropped the title to Danny Condry on December 20. In 1981, he went on to win the Atlantic Championship, where he feuded with Kevin Sullivan. Back to WWF (1982–1986) in 1982 Strong Bo formed a tag team with his on-screen brother Jules Strong bo. [3] On June 28, Strong Boha of Mr. Fuji and Sito won the team tag championship at Madison Square Garden in New York City. [6] During the match, special guest referee Ivan Potsky counted The fall, but did not see Fuji’s leg draped over the bottom rope. In the July 13 wrestling championship episode, the Strongbos lost the titles again to Fuji and Syto, but in the October 26 episode of Wrestling Championships, Strongboha defeated Fuji and Syto for their second WWF tag team title as a team. [6] In the March 8, 1983 episode of Wrestling Championships, the Strongbus lost titles to wild samuans (Efka and Sika). [3] After failing to reclaim the belts, the Strongbus were dissolved. [7] The retirement (1986–1994, 2008) of Strongbow retired in 1986, but still returns to the ring from time to time, most importantly for a royal battle legend in East Rutherford, New Jersey in 1987. In retirement, Strongbo joined a W Road agent [2] [3] he also participated in a fictional line in 1994 in which he coached Tatanka (a true Native American of the Lomby tribe). [8] Strongbow was inducted into the WWF Hall of Fame class in 1994 by Gorilla Monson. Strongbo’s last appearance at WWE was a brief appearance on the November 17, 2008 episode of Monday Night Drew, when Stephanie McMaun introduced her to the audience in Atlanta. [1] Strongbow’s personal life in 2011 killed his son Joe Jr. in the 1980s and early 1990s, mainly as Mark Pyle and Mark Young at WWF from 1986-1990, and Vince Young in W.C. W.W. Joe Jr. died in 2016 at the age of 48. She also has a Pachco daughter from Portland, Oregon. Scarpa’s death collapsed in her home in late 2011 and was hospitalized. He died in that hospital on April 3, 2012, at the age of 83. He was buried in Griffin, Georgia.
