I have lived a thousand years quotes

In, we escaped the selection of the devilish doctor Mengele, pretty beautiful The year was written by Livia Bitton-Jackson. Livia Bitton Jackson was a Holocaust survivor, she was 13 when she was taken to a concentration camp. Her name was Ellie L. Friedman but later turned to Livia. Eli is now where a yellow star should be whenever he goes out. Not long after, Ellie and her family should give up all of their possessions, and board a train. Eli has no idea what lies ahead and she fears the worst. After lots of travel he sees a new camp, it's called Auschwitz. When he gets of the train he gets a number tattooed on his arm, a -17360. Eli struggles to survive with her mother and persevere through all of forced labor. Rumors are swirling that Hitler is dead, and giving Eli a new spark of hope. Eli and her mother go through inspections and a row wether determines they leave the camp or stay and go to the gas chamber. Eli fails her inspection and her mother must leave to go the opposite line. Eli makes a very dangerous move and sneaks into the second line to be with his mom. After days of travel, they make it to their new home. It's a real home and people who own the house are kind, and are willing to help them with their injuries. After several weeks, Ellie and her mother must board another train. While on this trip, Americans get to hold a train and Ellie and her mother are freed. I'm fourteen years old, and I've lived a thousand years, I am numb to the cold. With hunger. With death and blood, and the rattle of the train rolling on and on. I Finally freedom. Why don't I think so? Why don't I think so? - Eli, PG 205. I believe this is a strong quote. it gives you an idea of Ellie's experience in the Holocaust. It also gives a good theme to the story, if you hope and believe in the best you can get through something. The way she can describe it is cruel and short, but it gets her point throughout. Ellie was full of optimism when the worst things happened to her and her mother. He showed bravery and courage and should serve as a role model for those going through terrible times. Bar.
