Best 1 Season [6] and Best of Season 2 both released on DVD in the Netherlands, Australia and Belgium on 9 April 2009. [8] The Netherlands also missed the second season, although both seasons were only released with dutch backups. It is not known if more places or elsewhere will follow Europe. In the United States, the entire seasons are currently available on amazon video instant streaming service. [10] All three seasons were previously available on the Netflix Instant Streaming service (season 2, episode 18: Music Class & amp; Class Clown was the only episode missing). Alliance Entertainment has released the first two seasons of DVD in Canada alone, but again production was delayed. [11] [12] Reception Ratings Debut Ned's Declassified School Survival Guide, on September 12, 2004, received a 4.5 rating, with 914,000 tween viewers who were described as healthy but not as star ratings by Variety's Denise Martin. [14] Critical Robert Lloyd of the Los Angeles Times after reviewing the series finale of Ned's Declassified School Survival Guide noted that it was one of the best series on television — a show that had genre conventions and led them through unpredictable changes. [15] In June 2008, Werkheiser signed a development agreement with Nickelodeon to deal with his character's adventures in high school. [16] The show has never been greenlit to production because other key actors from the original series have been busy with their projects - creator and executive producer Scott Fellows worked on another Nickelodeon show, The Big Time Rush; Daniel Curtis Lee was committed to Disney XD's Zeke and Luther; and Lindsey Shaw worked on the lead on ABC Family 10 Things I Hate About You.
