The CSI 300 financial index fell 1.2%, while the gauge of Shanghai-listed property developers fell 2.3%, its lowest in six months. Under the new rules, the nation's largest state lenders must cut their loan exposure to the real estate sector to 40% or less. Bank mortgage lending should not exceed 32.5% of their outstanding credit, regulators said in a joint statement last week. Those who exceed the cap will have a four-year grace period to meet demand. The margin follows a series of asset crackdowns, highlighting the government's commitment to risk control in the bubble-trending sector. It did little to reduce interest rates as China's house prices rose every month since mid-2015 and were recently driven by global monetary easing policies amid a surge in the number of people who have been housed. Most hit by the new rules include The Bank of Chengdu Co., which fell 8.1%, led the recession. Still positive per share, Chinese banks registered in Hong Kong Last year, China's housing watchdog and central bank asked 12 developers, including China Evergrande Group, Sunac China Holdings Ltd. and China Vanke Co. to report total debt financing and business data on the 15th day of every month to monitor their health. New home prices rose 0.12% in November, the slowest pace since February, after a broader real estate edge cooled demand. This new policy is in line with the direction of strengthening the governance and protection of huang chengyu bubbles, the banks are divided into five categories and subject to different ceilings based on their loans to developers and home buyers. Those who do not comply will face additional capital costs, according to the statement (updated with the share price in the fifth chart). Transactions of managers 01* transactions by individuals who unleash responsibility for management and individual (47)(Bloomberg) – Fiat Chrysler Automobiles NV and PSA Group are poised to receive shareholder signings in a combination that endured two years of extraordinary drama, marked by talk of re-closing again, changing their industry and a massive global epidemic. At two separate meetings Monday, investors will be asked to approve a merger that would establish Stellantis, the world's fourth-largest automaker. Both obstacles overcome to get to this point are plentiful and prosperous, with Fiat even managing to patch things up after a brief attempt to join forces with PSA's Archival Renault SA. Fiat Chrysler and PSA executives think they will increase returns by similar sizes to Volkswagen AG and Toyota Motor Corp., and have more resources to compete with electric car upstarts and tech industry interlopers. Strengths, weaknesses, the combined company will boast an impressive makeover in North America's lucrative trucks and SUV divisions thanks to the Ram and Jeep divisions of Fiat Chrysler and the Peugeot and Citroen brands, where PSA's revival is specialized in Europe and is the envy of the french foes who have overturned Renault. But both have weaknesses, too. Fiat's merger with Chrysler did little to improve the fortunes of luxury lines Alfa Romeo and Maserati, while PSA's Opel acquisition made the company more reliant on Europe's more crowded and shrinking market. Shares of Peugeot and Fiat Chrysler both rose 1.8% shortly after the start of regular trading Monday, giving the company a combined market capitalization of about 44 billion euros ($54 billion). The task of shaking Stellantis's portfolio will fall to PSA CEO Carlos Tavares, a highly competitive amateur rally driver who calls himself a performance psychopath. He takes Darwin's view of the industry, arguing that only strong car manufacturers will survive the rotation to electric propulsion systems and the pursuit of autonomous driving. Governance Issues It has a strong track record in M&A and operational restructuring. Institutional Equity Services analysts said in a report last month. Meanwhile, proxy advisers advised investors to vote in favor of the merger based on strong strategic and financial reasons. Concerns about Stellantis's governance ISS have ruled out a voting structure of loyalty that would give a greater sway to investors who hold shares for at least three years, a binding nomination process in which only the board will be able to nominate new additions and move away from the annual board elections. However, those qualms are more than Fiat Chrysler shareholders who received a pre-merger dividend of 2.9 billion euros ($3.6 billion). The board of directors of the two companies is also considering a potential distribution of 500 million euros to each company before they close the deal, or 1 billion euros after that, to the shareholders of the consolidated entity. The Agnelli family, which controls Fiat Chrysler, led by chairman John Elkann, agreed in September to shave 2.6 billion euros from the first dividend that the car maker's shareholders would receive to give Tavares more cash to work with when he used the cap of Stellantis.Extracting SavingsAt the same time Fiat Chrysler and PSA raised their estimates for annual coordination. Companies have previously said they will be able to extract 3.7 billion euros in savings every year without closing any plants. Tavares will have to navigate across the political currents in France, Italy and the United States, where automakers have deep national roots. He has previously dealt with difficult tasks, bringing the French carmaker back from brink after taking over as CEO in 2014 and reviving Opel after receiving from General Motors Co. in 2017. As with other executives across the industry. But getting bigger doesn't have to be a reward. Tesla Inc. is now worth more than VW, which is preparing its biggest effort among immigrants to power its vast fleet. GM has retreated from several markets to focus on North America and China, while Renault and its partner Nissan Motor Co Ltd are restructuring after a major loss. The auto industry has been chasing scale and consolidation for years, but it's slower than many would like to see Houchois question whether GM, Toyota and Renault-Nissan have provided evidence that there may be restrictions. The record for the fourth century is in sight for a shekel, despite large foreign currency purchases, and economists cut april interest rates, a survey by Bloomberg unanimously expects the central bank to leave the benchmark interest rate at 0.1% on Monday. I don't think they can do much. Barry Toff, a former director of market operations at the Bank of Israel who helped design the intervention program. I think they know the same, and just don't want to say the currency gained nearly 7.5% against the greenback last year. It was trading up 0.2% at $3.2085 at 10:07 a.m. .m on Monday in Tel Aviv. Israel is heading for its fourth vote in two years over the central bank's budget crisis to buy nearly $17 billion of foreign currency through November in an effort to slow the roll of shekels yet to spend about 40 billion shekels ($12.4 billion) to buy government bonds, and start other crisis programs. It has resisted attempts to tame it for several reasons. Exports have helped extend Israel's current account surplus to a record high, investment in technology companies is roaring at an unprecedented pace, and overseas sales of natural gas are on the rise. Why Israel tried and failed to slow the roar of CurrencyBank Hapoalim Ltd. chief economist Victor Bahar did not expect action on Monday, but did not rule out a zero rate cut within months. Now the focus. The Bank of Israel is mostly in the Bahar exchange rate, I do not deny the opportunity they say ‘come to break the momentum’ and the rate is lower to zero. In an upcoming meeting, Here's what to focus on Monday: The recovery of unemployment in the coronavirus case puts Israel into a third lock, sending unemployment back up. In November, joblessness was around 15%, and the Finance Ministry estimated it could be at 7% by the end of 2021 - a figure before the double crisis. The Israel vaccine is competing to vaccinate its population against the virus and has jumped out into a global leader. However, the case is in an upswing and any economic consequences from vaccination may not be clear for several months. The rapid pace of the inoculation program has led economists at Leumi Le-Israel Bank and limited capital market leaders to boost their growth prospects for 2021. The country is now heading for its fourth election in two years on March 23 and entering its second year without a revised spending plan (updated the fourth paragraph with 12th market movement with a new GDP trend).
