Shadowfang Keep a haunted near the borders of Gilneas in the southern Silverpine Forest [45, 68], on a high bluff overlooking Pyrewood Village. It is the former base of operations of the locust archaeologist Arugal, who came from Baron Silverlaine with the worgen children and held them until they were defeated by Horde agents. The castle is now occupied by the traitor gilnean noblemanVincent Godfrey, both homeland and forsaken his returned from the dead. History The courtyard from the Dungeons of the World on the Old WoW site: During the Third War, the Scourge of kirin Tor wizards fought against their immortal armies. When the Dalaran sorcerers died in battle, they would rise shortly afterwards, joining their former power into the growing Troublemaker. Frustrated by the lack of progress (and against the advice of his peers), Arugal chose to invok extra-sized assets to support Dalaran's declining ranks. Arugal's call brought the predatory worgen into the world of Azeroth. Wild werewollers not only slaughtered the Troublemaker, but quickly became enemies of the sorcerers themselves. Worgen surrounded the protection of the noble Baron Silverlaine. Located on the small hamlet of Pyrewood, keeping it quickly fell into shadow and ruin. Guillt-mad, Arugal adopted Worgen as his children and was drawn to his new name, 'Shadowfang Keep'. Still there, his great pet, protected by Fenrus - and Baron Silverlaine said he was haunted by the vengeive ghost. Pyrewood Village Shadowfang Keep is a stronghold of Alliance power but now Kirin Tor is shaded north by a mad old mage dark residence called Arugal. The cursed villagers of Worgen and Pyrewood who follow Tut are what this lunatic does. During the Third War, Arugal made this worgen as an ally but could not be controlled and turned to him and other soldiers. After that, he went mad, and now he considers them his children. Its worgen run wide throughout the forest. During the World of Warcraft events, agents of Banshee Queen Sylvanas Windrunner were sent to solve both the mysterious worgen mystery and ultimately end the source of invasion of silverpine creatures. Eventually we managed to discover that crazy archmage, Arugal, worgen was behind his presence and ordered the Forsaken command to kill him. This section is about Cataclysm-specific content. The dungeon has been updated to reflect current events. The level range has been reduced and a Heroism mode has been added. Lord Godfrey replaced Arugal as the last boss, which ended with him fleeing to Shadowfang Keep, given his attempt to assassinate the leaders of both the Alliance and Horde. Overview Shadowfang Introduction Is one of the first examples of players who will step up to keep the current SFK. Since the Worgen gangs have long disappeared with the death of Archmage Arugal, their gangs are completely immortal. The possibility of pre-Cataclysm SFK players encountering was the first uncertainly challenging example. In addition to the volume of existing gangs, many of the gangs here threw various curses, worgen had a special ability (active or passive) that affected the ability of almost any type of group to deal with them, and immortal people used Silence, which means that a tank can be caught and caught without healing in some fights. For its level, loot is highly desirable here, with several different items that twink can sell well through the market. Several bind-on-pickup blue items can also be found here, especially mages and warriors primarily. Although the level is still low enough that cash is not very plentiful, it still fell some silver.
