On CNBC's Mad Money Lightning Round, Jim Cramer said Ballard Power Systems Inc (NASDAQ: BLDP) is good, but Plug Power Inc (NASDAQ: PLUG) is his favorite. Cramer likes Romeo Power Inc (NYSE: RMO). The stock has fallen a lot and he thinks it's a bit attractive. Occidental Petroleum Corporation (NYSE: OXY) is going higher in the short term, according to Cramer. He advised a viewer not to sell it because it will likely go for his entry price of $33. Eventually, he would have to sell because the new administration believes fossil fuels are bad for the environment. Cramer almost pulled the trigger and bought salesforce.com, inc. (NYSE: CRM). He's holding out right now, but he can start buying it next week. Mum reveals how she earns £1000 every day working from home, after her online trading platform valued at 10 million pounds! Watching the markets with an eye to the greatest chance, Raymond James strategist Tavis McCourt sees both risk and opportunity in current market conditions. The possibility, in his view, stems from the obvious factors: Democrats won both Georgia Senate seats in the latest runoff vote, giving the incoming Biden Administration majority support in both Houses of Congress - and increasing the chances of meaningful fiscal support getting signed into law in the short term. More importantly, the coronavirus vaccination program continues, and reports indicate that Pfizer's vaccine, one of two approved in the United States, is effective against the new strain of the virus. A successful vaccination programme will speed up the economic recovery so that states can lockdown lockdown And get people back to work. The risks also come from the policy area and public health. Democrats in the House of Representatives have approved an impeachment trial against President Trump despite the impending natural shutdown of his term in office, and that passage reduces the chances of political reconciliation in a highly polarized environment. And while the COVID strain is matched by current vaccines, there is still a risk that a new strain will develop that is not covered by existing vaccinations – which could restart the cycle of lockdowns and economic decline. Another risk McCourt sees beyond these two would be a sharp rise in inflation. He doesn't discount it, but sees it as unlikely to happen soon. ... product/service inflation is only really an option after reopenings, so the market feels a bit bulletproof in the very short term, and thus the continued rally, with Dems winning the GA race just add fuel to the stimulus fire, McCourt noted. Some of McCourt's colleagues among raymond james analyst cadre keep those risks in mind and put their imprimatur on strong dividend stocks. We've looked at Raymond James' latest call, and using the TipRanks database, we've chosen two high-yield stocks. These Buy-rated tickers bring a yield of 7%, a strong attraction for investors interested in using the current good times to set up a defensive firewall should the risks materialize. Enterprise Products Partners (EPD) We start in the energy sector, a business segment that has long been known for both high cash flows and high yields. Enterprise Products Partners is a midstream company, part of the network that moves hydrocarbon products from wellheads to warehouse farms, refineries, and distribution points. Enterprise controls over 50,000 miles worth of pipelines, shipping terminals on Texas' Gulf coast, and storage facilities for 160 million barrels of oil and 14 billion cubic feet of natural gas. The company was hit by low prices and low demand in 1H20, but partially recovered in the second half. Revenue turned around, growing 27% sequentially to reach $6.9 billion in Q3. That figure was down year-over-year, slipping 5.4%, but came in more than 6% above the Q3 forecast. Q3 earnings, at 48 cents per share, were just below forecast but were up 4% year-over-year and 2% sequentially. EPD recently declared its 4Q20 dividend distribution, at 45 cents per common share. This is an increase from the previous payment of 44 cents, and marks the first increase in two years. At $1.80 annualized, the payment gives 7.9%. Among the bulls is Raymond James' Justin Jenkins, who rates EPD a strong purchase. The analyst gives the stock a price target of $26, which means an increase of 15 per cent (Click here to see Jenkins' results) Jenkins supported his bullish stance and noted: After combination of integration, balance strength and ROIC results remains best in class. We see EPD as arguably best placed to withstand the volatile landscape... With EPD's footprint, demand gains, project growth and agreed ramps should more than offset supply headwinds and lower y/y marketing results... It's not often that analysts all agree on a stock, so when that happens, take note. EPD's Strong Buy consensus rating is based on a unanimous 9 Buyer. The stock's average price target of $24.63 suggests an increase of 9 percent (see EPD stock analysis at TipRanks) AT&T, Inc. (T) AT&T is one of the market's instantly recognizable stocks. The company is a member of the S&P 500 and has a reputation as one of the stock market's top dividend payers. AT&T is a true big-cap industry giant, with a market value of $208 billion and the largest network of mobile and landline phone services in the United States. The acquisition of TimeWarner (now WarnerMedia) in a process that runs between 2016 and 2018 has given the company a large stake in the streaming business for mobile content. AT&T saw a decline in revenue and earnings in 2020 under pressure from the coronal pandemic - but the decline was modest as the same pandemic also put a premium on telecommunications and network systems that tended to support AT&T's business. Revenue in 3Q20 was $42.3 billion, up 5 percent from the quarter a year ago. On positive notes, free cash flow yoy increased from $11.4 billion to $12.1 billion, and the company reported a net gain of 5.5 million new subscribers. Subscriber growth was driven by the new rollout of the 5G network – and by premium content services. The company has had its reputation as a dividend master and has finaled its latest dividend statement for payment in February 2021. The payment, at 52 per common share, is the fifth in a row at current level and is annualizes to $2.08, giving a return of 7.2%. By comparison, the average yield among tech sector peer companies is only 0.9%. AT&T has kept its dividend strong for the past 12 years. Raymond James analyst Frank Louthan sees AT&T as a classic defensive value share and describes T's current condition as one with the bad news 'baked in.' [We] believe there is more that can go right over the next 12 months than it may be worse for AT&T. Throw in the fact that the shares are heavily shorted and we believe this is a recipe for upside. Big cap value names are hard to come by, and we believe that investors who can wait a few months for an average reversion while locking in a 7% dividend should be rewarded for buying AT&T at current levels, Louthan said. In line with these comments, Louthan rates T an Outperform (i.e. buy), and his $32 price target implies room for 10% growth from it Level. (To see Louthan's track record, click here) What does the rest of the Think? Looking at consensus breakdown, the opinions of other analysts are more spread out. 7 Buy ratings, 6 Holds and 2 Seller add up to a Moderate Buy consensus. In addition, the average price target of $31.54 indicates a potential of 9%. Investors' Business DailySome left-for-dead penny stocks are now billion-dollar companies, thanks to the rally in the S&P 500 and other indexes. The idea that value stocks are finally waking up after a decade-long sleep is almost a joke in financial circles. What's at least a little different about Vanguard's perspective is that its model suggests that investors have been correct in cloud value stocks, at least until the last few years. Our research shows that there is a value premium and that the recent outperformance of growth stocks can be partly explained by falling long-term inflation levels and the lack of significant acceleration in earnings growth over the past decade, the company said. China is one of the world's most polluting countries, a reality that dates back to when that power emerged as a developing country. (Bloomberg) - U.S. stock futures fell, erasing early gains, as investors assessed the details of President-elect Joe Biden's $1.9 trillion spending-bill proposal that includes $350 billion in aid to states. Contracts for the S&P 500.m index fell 0.4 percent. The underlying index lost 0.4% in the cash session, with investors growing concerned about the path of Federal Reserve policy now that signs of faster inflation are emerging. In Europe, the Stoxx Europe 600 index followed up, falling as much as 0.7 percent, dragged lower by energy and mining shares. The health sector outperformed and was the only industrial group stuck in the green. The Fed's largesse and past federal spending packages worth nearly $3 trillion have driven a 70% gain in U.S. stocks from pandemic lows in March. Biden's plan - long telegraphed since his election in November - is more than double the package approved at the end of December and proposes sending $1,400 to qualified individuals. It also calls for increasing the federal minimum wage to $15 an hour U.S. stocks have pushed to record after record after record approvals and Biden's election in November. His agenda, including ambitious support and a follow-up plan to spend on projects such as infrastructure, was given a when Democrats gained control of the vote of Senate Vice President Kamala Harris, it must help secure democrats' victory on issues that require a simple majority to gain a majority in the evenly divided upper house. But Biden's proposals, including support for states and money for health care, would likely require 60 votes, which seems difficult to achieve. Given the disgust Republicans have for state aid, Mr. Biden's bipartisan hopes will immediately be tested, Jeffrey Halley, senior market analyst with Oanda Asia Pacific Pte., wrote in a note. And that's before the remake America bills come through with almost certain increases in taxes. Record climbs in stocks have stretched valuations to levels not seen in two decades, prompting warnings of a bubble that will lead to a quick selloff. Investors have tolerated them so far because of Biden's promise to amp up spending not only on direct aid, but also on fighting viruses and rolling vaccines. His bill allocates $20 billion to a national vaccine program and $50 billion to expand testing capacity. Signs of foam abound, though. In a memo titled This Is Ludicrous, Bespoke Investment Group summarized the latest action. It cited 59 U.S.-listed stocks that trade at prices that are more than 10 times sales and have more than doubled in the past three months. Stocks currently in this category have risen 760% since March and have a combined market value of $320 billion, according to George Pearkes, global macro strategist at the company. Stimulus will always be net positive for short-term growth and profits, but the question is always how much is already priced in, said Dan Suzuki, deputy investment manager at Richard Bernstein Advisors. There is more room for stimulus to get priced in from here, but it only increases the cyclical recovery that will likely take place regardless of whether the stimulus is passed. But some operate at the opposite end of the spectrum, and could yet offer investors untapped opportunities. H.C Wainwright analyst Ram Selvaraju points in the direction of Sorrento Therapeutics (SRNE), as one such company. Selvaraju rates SRNE a Buy along with a $30 price target, implying a 275% upside from current level. (To see Selvaraju track tracks Click here) So what lies behind the optimistic outlook? Well, for starters, Sorrento has a stake in two cell-based immunotherapy companies that could drive value in Sorrento shares in the coming months. One is Celularity, a clinical stage cell therapeutic company focused on cellular drugs for cancer, infectious diseases, and degenerative diseases. Celularity is expected to go public later this year via an SPAC merger with GX Acquisition Corp. The merged company's intrinsic value after the transaction's close will land at about $1.7 billion. Selvaraju estimates Sorrento's position should be worth in the $200 million region. The other company is NantKwest, which recently signed an agreement to merge with ImmunityBio. The transaction is expected to close in 1H21. Sorrento owns about 8.2 million shares in the clinical stage immunotherapy company. These are currently worth about $121 million, going by NantKwest's recent share price. In addition, the analyst highlights Sorrento's burgeoning portfolio of assets spanning three different therapeutic areas (non-opioid pain management, oncology and COVID-19). In fact, on the Covid-19 front alone, Sorrento has taken a broad-based approach and has a long list of diagnostic, prophylactic and therapeutic offerings in the pipeline, with updates expected to come soon and furiously. These include two rapid detection tests; COVI-STIX, for which the company filed for Emergency Use Authorization (EUA) in the United States in December, and COVI-TRACE, which Selvaraju claims could come in handy at any mass collection event. We believe that the incentive to facilitate the large and indeed ubiquitous deployment of the COVI-TRACE test is extremely high and governments around the world may try to implement this in their respective regions, the 5-star analyst said. Other Covid-19 candidates include COVIGUARD - a SARS-CoV-2 neutralizing antibody, COVI-AMG - an affinity-matured version of the COVIGUARD neutralizing antibody, a neutralizing antibody cocktail named COVI-SHIELD and COVIDTRAP, an ACE2 receptor decoy, intended to mimic the mammalian ACE receptor that serves as the primary portal for the SARS-CoV-2 virus to penetrate human cells. It's been relatively quiet when it comes to other analyst activity. In the last three months, only 2 analysts have issued ratings. But since they were both buyer, the word on the street is that SRNE is a Moderate Buy. Based on the $25.50 average price target, shares could climb 219% higher in the next twelve months. For the second time in a week, hydrogen fuel cell company Plug Power (PLUG) had big news to report. Last week, as you may recall, it was a $1.5 billion alliance with Korea's SK Group to build a hydrogen economy for South Korea. This week it's a deal to build fuel cell vans in France along with local partner Renault - and although the Plug didn't attach a price tag to this one, investors still cheered like mad, sending Plug stock up more than 22% in a day. As Plug revealed on Tuesday, it has signed a memorandum of understanding with the French automaker. Through it, the parties expressed interest in forming a 50-50 joint venture within the next six months to deliver turn-key fuel cell vehicle solutions with hydrogen fuel, refueling infrastructure and services to customers in France - and capture 30% of the market for fuel cell-powered light commercial vehicles in the country. Renault will provide car manufacturing capacity, and Plug will supply fuel cell systems to make them go zoom! Plug will also manufacture hydrogen refueling systems to fuel up vans on the road. Shareholders weren't the only ones excited about Plug Power's announcement, and analyst Christopher Souther at B. Riley quickly crashed out a note doubling down on his buy rating on Plug stock, and raising its price target more than 50%, to $79 a share. (Click here to see Souther's results) Calling Renault a strong partner for Plug on the continent, where the local market for fuel cell-powered light commercial vehicles is expected to grow from virtually zero today, to 500,000 units by 2030. Souther increased his long-range for Plug's commercial vehicle revenue accordingly. In fact, long before he is valuing Plug stock at 20 times his fiscal 2024 sales forecast. What kind of forecast is that? Souther didn't say straight. But a $79 share price would imply a company value of just over $37 billion for Plug stock, implying that the analyst sees the new relationship with Renault pushing Plug's 2024 revenue up past $1.8 billion - roughly a six-fold increase over Plug's subsequent revenue of $308 million. Curiously, this estimate is nearly double the $1 billion in fiscal 2024 revenue that the plug itself most recently promised. And here's another curious thing about Souther's predictions: While not explicitly putting a figure to his 2024 forecast, Souther gave detailed guesses on what Plug will produce near term, predicting full year 2020 sales and full year 2021 sales as well. Contrary to the average consensus on Wall Street, where most analysts agree Plug made perhaps $329 million in sales last year, Souther believes the company's revenue was only $291 million. Similar consensus estimates for the 2021 financial year put Plug's sales at $444 million - but Souther sees only $419 million. Now how the analyst goes from predicting disappointing results for two years in a row, to predicting sales twice what Plug itself promises just three years from now is not entirely clear. And why he recommends that investors buy Plug prior to what, by his own admission, appear to be sales disappointments is similarly opaque. Then again, as Souther himself laments: No matter how expensive Plug stock becomes, it's hard to combat the mundane headwinds. So that's B. Riley's view, what does street of the street have in mind? The current outlook presents a conundr on. On the one hand, based on 10 Buys and 1 Hold, the stock has a Strong Buy consensus rating. But after soaring so high recently, analysts expect shares to cool down and expect the downside of 18% from current levels.
