We carry a large number of airbrush hoses and connectors from different brands to meet all your requirements. Our selection includes air hoses with different sized couplings, quick-release fittings, air compressor hoses with gauges and water hose accessories, a range of outlet pipes and air hose adapters to help you connect your air pulls, air duct hoses and compressors together. With this hardware, you will be able to hang your airbrush on the compressor when choosing the right hose length and end valve size. Knitted and plastic airbrush hoses For starters, we will guide you through the main types of airbrush hoses. And then we get some tips on choosing the right airbrush connectors for them. In general, one can distinguish between simple smooth and knitted hoses. The first ones are usually made of vinyl or plastic, among them you will find both straight and rolled hoses. These come in rubber or PCV materials wrapped with a protective nylon cloth. This allows them to work at a higher pressure of up to 100 psi and better cope with air pulsation. Above all, airbrush knitted hoses offer more flexibility, although they are usually heavier than weight than vinyl or plastic. But it's hard to put some of them in preference because it all depends on your needs. For example, for ordinary hobbyists, it is usually enough to work with simple smooth hoses. Why finding the right airbrush hoses & connectors is so important if you've ever changed an airbrush hose, or you've just been about it and you're in the process of finding some information, you already know it can control the nut. Although all airbrush hoses seem to be different searches it doesn't bring you closer to the information you need. Modern airbrush designs can offer you a lot of variations on the size of their hose joints and forgings. And it's ok if your airbrush and compressor are from the same company, in which case the choice of hoses and accessories is easy enough. Just use standard components of the same brand. But note that even within the same brand, there are models that come with unique hardware parameters. And if you're one of those lucky owners, you know what we mean. The matter is even more complicated if you have several airbrushes from different manufacturers or your airbrush and compressor are of different origins. Usually this applies to such brands as Aerograph, Aztek, Badger, Paasche. The sizes of their hose connectors and adapters may not correspond to components of other brands. For this reason, we have a large selection of Paasche airbrush hoses and fittings, as well as a wide range of kits for mounting air compressors of other brands. A few tips for choosing airbrush hoses and Airbrushes connectors usually come with hoses. But if you are going to buy hoses yourself, make sure they are compatible with your airbrush. When buying an airbrush hose, remember that it will need mounting to connect to the compressor. Using threaded tape on airbrush hose fittings can also be of little help as there are fittings that require more accuracy, while the tape can make it too bulky and spoil the seal. Fortunately, there is a solution to this problem: you can find adapters to help you customize almost any hose to any airbrush. And one more important point. When buying an airbrush hose take note that not all of them come with a quick disconnection clutch. These fittings are optional components, but with them, you will make your airbrushing much easier. You can use them to connect the air hose to the compressor, filter, regulator and filter, controller to the atomizer. Their main attraction for me is easy cleaning. Plastic nozzles are considered consumables, so I need them every few years. I thought that after the testers acquired Aztek, they would guarantee the longevity of the Aztek supply chain. Apparently not. Why did they cough up? When they were introduced, most airbrush users weren't sure the mostly-plastic airbrush would last long compared to all-metal models, so they weren't willing to risk taking a try. As a marketing move, Aztek was given a lifetime guarantee. Sales have increased. Since opening the airbrush body to perform maintenance would void the warranty when they stopped working properly returned in droves by testers for warranty claims. The warranty was eventually limited to 3 years. They have now ceased production. Even looking back, the lifetime warranty on Aztek wasn't really smart. Iwata has a 5 year warranty on their all-metal airbrushes, so expect a mostly plastic airbrush for the last life is really pushing it. That said, I'm a casual user and I still have my original Aztek from 30 years ago, and it still works. If the jets were still available, I wouldn't be posting this thread. However, if a person uses daily for his profession, I can see that they wear out within a few years. I was looking for the popular Gray universal jet. I was able to find some of the black acrylic general purpose nozzles that have the same light gray color on the back of 0.40mm I bought some of them with the idea of replacing the inner sleeve/needle fitting into gray body nozzles, which seems to work. Both are 0.40 mm needles with gray ends, so theoretically they came from the same assembly line and are interchangeable. It's not the solution I prefer, but they don't have much choice in this matter. As I've been buying different jets, I've noticed some have C and/or X attached to the part number. (So the 9305 is now 9305C, or 9305CX.) The description looked the same as the previous jets, so I didn't think much about it. Big mistake. It is not clear what the testers have done with the X nozzles, but I cannot get them to work consistently; whereas nozzles without C/X work well. The 9305 and 9305C have a light grey body, but the 9305CX has a dark grey body. When reading in fine print on the packaging, it lists the specific numbers of the models of air crafts on which the nozzle can fit. Lessons. Avoid all X jets. Going on the assumption that the delivery of jets will eventually dry up, it gave me an excuse to buy an Iwata side-feed. Aztek cups and bottle adapters fit Iwata Eclipse. (The fit is a tad too tight, but a little grinding on the tube on the Aztek cup produces a decent fix.) The side-feed version will facilitate my transition because it matches Aztek. If I have to learn a new airbrush, I wanted to at least keep the side-feed. The all-metal construction is obviously much heavier, but it feels good and sprays very consistently and predictably. It is, of course, an accurate tool with excellent cut and finish. I rarely have airbrushing sessions that last more than an hour, so extra weight shouldn't be a problem. I bought some spare Aztek airbrushes. I prefer the new ones, but the only new ones left are in those decorative wooden crates with all the cutouts for the jets and cups. These run well north of $200 which helped make my mind make Iwata try. If I want the comfort of a quick cleanup, I reach for Aztek. But if it will be a long session, or require accuracy (for example, for ventilation), then it is time for Iwata. Adjusted 1 time(s). Last edit on 06/26/20 23:47 by tmotor. Testors rep gave me a top line Aztec after the first show and wanted me to use it as hard as I used my Paasche VL. I went over a few tips and finally gave up on it. He did another show for the testers and just used the brush for the show. I showed the brush and all the other products in the Testors series. I was almost invited to a big show at a big show and a hobby show in Chicago. Date: 06/27/20 23:21 Re: Aztek airbrush line interrupted by testers Author: tracktime Testers now Aztek airbrushes.
