Fans were crazy flavor, extoling virtues virtues salt and pepper or roasted red pepper. Kettle decided to find a way to harness that energy. Summer 2004 At events across the Pacific Northwest (Kettle based in Salem, Oregon), representatives asked people to name a flavor they would like us to make. They collected 16,000 ballots that suggested everything from chocolate chip to wasabi. We had to be able to make the flavor totally natural, the chips had to taste good, and we had to think it would sell, says Carolyn Richards, kettle's principal architect. Sorry, dreamers with bubble gum chips. January 2005 The first People's Choice campaign allows fans to decide which chip to make next, from a list of five. Visitors to Kettle's website could vote based only on the description of the flavor; There was no way to taste the chips. (And in the case of strawberry cream, whew!) However, 10,000 people voted, which was around 9,900 more people than we asked for before, says Michelle Peterman, vice president of marketing. July 2005 Spicy Thai and Cheddar Beer were introduced to the Fancy Food Show as Kettle's first People's Choice chips. The buzz has led more customers to ask stores to bring in french fries. U.S. sales rose 28.1% in 2005, to $31.3 million, while the market for chips as a whole grew by only 1.2%, according to Packaged Facts.January 2006 Year two of the People's Choice which allows customers to buy $10 party packages containing bags from each of the five flavor contestants. After Buffalo Bleu Cheese and Tuscan Three Cheese win, Kettle adjusted each flavor based on comments posted on their website by tasters before releasing them in the fall. January 2007 KettleNeighborhood.com, a community site for potato chip lovers, launched on the heels of the third People's Choice (Island Jerk won). We wanted something available 365 days a year, says Tim Fallon, president, North America. Kettle will use the site for flavor development. Fans will use it for all-day chip chat.
