If you want to sell used books, you don't need to limit yourself to traditional resale methods. If your book is over 20, you can sell it as a vintage item on Etsy or get something more creative than that! Some sellers have used books to be creative craft projects. Viewers for this type of sale can differ greatly from the audience of a typical used book. Instead of selling it to someone interested in reading a book, you sell it to someone who wants to display this kind of art at home. For these projects, customers will shop at craft sites such as Etsy, where handmade items are commonly used. Post items under categories such as Valentine's Day, paper anniversaries, date anniversaries or gifts for newlyweds. These categories can help you find your target audience. You have a lot of choices when it came to turn used books into crafts. For example, some particularly creative sellers change the books used into folded book art. This is when you fold the pages of a book and create a 3D image of a word or picture. Also popular is the piece of work in which a printed or drawn image uses a background, at the top. These pages are often taken from the dictionary used. Other creative sellers can take used books and cut pages inside to create hidden compartments that can hold small items such as keys. Before you start one of these types of projects, you can use it more intensively, take a look at what other projects are and see if similar projects are selling well. No matter which method you choose to sell used books, this process is not without risks.
