Glhs personal finance

See Carroll Shelby's personal 1965 Cobra 427 could fetch more than $2 million when it crosses the auction block in January 2021. Collectors who want to own one of Shelby's used cars without venturing into seven-figure territory will have the opportunity to bid for the 1986 Dodge Omni GLHS offered without a spare on the same sale. Although shelby's name is generally associated with high-performance Ford Mustang variants, he worked on several Dodge models during the 1980s after a temporary split with Blue Oval. He primarily placed the V8 in the first generation Dakota, but the GLH and GLHS hatchbacks based on the Omni were one of mopar's biggest flavor hits. Dodge and Shelby built 500 GLHS units (Goes Like Hell S'more), and No. 86 was owned by Shelby himself for several years, according to Mecum Auctions. Currently titled in Kansas to the Carroll Hall Shelby Trust. Shelby doesn't drive much of her Omni; Odometer shows 8,176 miles. It still wears original paint and exterior decals, and still comes with its factory interior, but (thankfully) goes up on a new set of tires. It is also not modified, which adds to his desire. It has won awards at car events, and has been featured in the calendar. Power for the GLHS comes from a turbocharged 2.2-liter four-cylinder engine with up to 175 horsepower. It rotates the front wheels via a five-speed manual transmission. If that doesn't sound like much, keep in mind the standard Omni gets four 1.6-litres that puts 64 horses under the driver's right foot and a four-speed manual transmission. Alternatively, remember that Porsche 944 and 911 were rated at 143 and 200 horsepower respectively, in 1986. GLHS Shelby was part of the Kissimmee 2021 Mecum sale. Bidding will begin on Friday, and 15.No and reserves are no other way to say cheap; it just means that someone will take home this GLHS at the end of the auction regardless of where the bidding stops. Mecum predicts hatchbacks will sell for anywhere between $50,000 and $75,000 excluding auction costs, which many considering good examples usually trade far fewer hands. Carry Trailer sold No. 189 (which has about 25,000 miles on the clock) for $17,255 in November 2019, for example. The big difference is that Shelby's name only appears on the car, not on her registration documents. Large numbers of American households were forced to plunder their retirement accounts to make ends meet over the past year, even as the federal government plunged trillions of extra taxpayer dollars into the economy to keep it afloat. Oh, and the average retirement savings in This upper middle class saver is $189,000—about enough to generate a lifetime annuity income for a 65-year-old couple of $760 a month. Basic physics, and the evidence of our own eyes, tells us that what goes up must come down. But the NASDAQ is over 13,000, and 500 is over 3,800, and some market watchers are starting to wonder where the ceiling is. Banking giant JPMorgan is investigating that question, trying to figure out how much space is left to run the bull in current market conditions. Looking back at the collapse of Lehman Brothers, and the 2008 financial crisis, the bank's global market strategist Nikolaos Panigirtzoglou noted that, among stocks, bonds and cash, the average equity holdings have been 42.3%. He pointed out that this 'neutral' rate was breached in November, and equity allocations are now closer to 43.8%. An increase from this average would imply that there may not be much room for stocks to keep rising - except that the post-Lehman equity allocation high, reached in January 2018, is 47.6%. To state the obvious, we're not there yet. Panigirtzoglou sees the ongoing expansion of the M2 monetary base triggering a stock boom, and isolating it from changes in the bond market. Against this backdrop, JPMorgan analysts banged the table on two stocks in particular, noting that each could jump more than 30% next year. We run both through the TipRanks database to see what other Wall Street analysts have to say about them. ContextLogic (WISH) We'll start with ContextLogic, the parent company Wish.com. This e-commerce market has been known for its social media advertising, both for its everywhere presence and entertainment value. Wish has a knack for drawing traffic and customers – it has become the third largest online retail site in the U.S., with over 100 million monthly visitors and over 150 million items listed for sale. The company's revenue exceeds $2 billion a year. The company's growth was driven by several factors: high monthly traffic, a large e-commerce customer base – and mostly untapped from low-income households looking for budget goods, and a worldwide network of more than 500 million merchants. WISH ran a lot of hype in December, when it held an IPO - and saw a price drop of nearly 17% on its first trading day. The offer was priced at $24 per share, but the stock closed its first day of trading at $20.05. Even so, the company still raised $1.1 billion on its first day on the market, and currently boasts a market capitalization of $14.5 billion. Covering the stock for JPM, 5-star analyst Doug Anmuth wrote: We believe Wish has significant growth potential with the current penetration of ~3% of the estimated global market target at 1B+ households, and less than 1% of the overall share of the global mobile trading market of $2.1T. Wish leverages data science to drive all aspects of its business from user acquisition to pricing to logistics, which helps the company nimble and should drive a larger global scale over time. We expect you to deliver more consistent 20%+ growth over the next few years... For the end of this, Anmuth Anmuth WISH an Overweight (i.e. Buy), and the $30 price target implies a potential upside of 43% for the next 12 months. (To watch Anmuth's track record, click here) Wall Street is quite positive on this 'Moderate Buy' stock: WISH has received 8 'buy' ratings and 4 'hold' in the last three months. Running figures across the Road, the average 12-month price target lands at $26, representing about 24% upside potential. (See WISH stock analysis at TipRanks) Passage Bio (PASG) The second JPM option we see is Passage Bio, a genetic medicine company. This section focuses on developing treatments for rare, life-threatening central nervous system disorders, using adeno-related virus delivery systems. Monogenic disorders are caused by mutations or defects in a single gene; the viral system associated with adeno is adapted to transmit corrected genes directly to the affected cells. The company currently has three main drug candidates under development: PBGM01, a treatment for GM1 gangliosidosis; PBFT02, to treat frontotemporal dementia; and PBKR03 as a treatment for Krabbe disease. All three are in the development cycle phase that enables IND, and the company announced earlier this month that PBGM01 has received FDA approval to advance to phase 1/2 trials. PBFT02 and PBKR03 are both scheduled to start Phase 1/2 later in 1H20. The upbeat outlook for the Passage research program underlies JPM's stance on stocks. 5-star analyst Anupam Rama has upgraded his company's rating from Neutral to Overweight and set a price target of $35, indicating a potential ~34% upside on the one-year horizon. (To watch Rama's track record, click here) Supporting its increase, Rama noted the FDA's approval on PBGM01 and wrote, [We] expect the focus to return to the upcoming GM1 data mid-year, which will represent a major early clinical catalyst for the company. Based on known pre-clinical data, we will be looking for gm1 PBGM01 preliminary data to not only reduce the risk of the program itself but also the company's broader platform. Analyst consensus on PASG is not unanimous, but almost. Strong Buy consensus rating is supported by 3 Buy against one Hold. The stock sold for $26.25, and the average price target of $32.83 showed a ~25% increase. Plug Power Inc.'s (NASDAQ: PLUG) shares are primed for further gains, according to H.C. Wainwright, who issued a new Street-high price target for fuel cell manufacturers. Plug Power analysts: Analyst Amit Dayal maintained buy ratings on Plug Power and increased its price target from $60 to $85.The Plug Power Thesis: Plug Power announced its second major partnership in a week span, cementing its position as the world's leading hydrogen and fuel cell game, Dayal said in a note Wednesday. The company forged a joint venture with Renault ADR (OTC: RNLSY) in France to achieve a 30% share of the fuel cell-powered light commercial vehicle market in Europe, the analyst said. The partnership is driven by a favorable regulatory environment for non-ICE adoption in Europe, he said. Revenue contributions of about $10 million will materialize from the venture by early 2022, with a more meaningful path occurring in 2024, Dayal said. GME shares surged Wednesday in an apparent short squeeze, but one analyst who specializes in information on short sales doesn't think that's the case. It's business as usual to stock Plug Power (PLUG). Following last year's unusual market gain, almost two weeks into 2021, shares are already up a staggering 111%. At this rate, last year 956% of haul shares could not be exceeded. The latest surge comes after the hydrogen fuel cell maker announced a new partnership to add to its growing list of collaborations. The company has signed an MOU (memorandum of understanding) with Groupe Renault to jointly develop several types of vehicles and infrastructure in the EU. These include light commercial transport, taxis, and commercial people and hydrogen turn-key solutions, with a 50/50 joint venture expected to begin in 1H21. Oppenheimer analyst Colin Rusch believes the latest deal further strengthens PLUG's position in the Hydrogen industry. With PLUG announcing another strategic partnership today, we believe the company has quickly become a global company serving three continents and positioning itself as a critical enabler of hydrogen economy, the 5-star analyst said. In collaboration with Renault PLUG is now partnering with the No. 2 game in Europe for light commercial vehicles. We also noted Renault's ownership position in Nissan and Mitsubishi as a potential path for PLUG to expand its vehicle opportunities. Rusch anticipates initial deliveries of vehicles will begin later this year or early 2022 with the goal of reaching as many as 500K vehicles by 2030. Plug's business has grown to include most types of vehicles, and Rusch noted that Class 8 trucks remain one area in transportation where PLUG now has no significant exposure. We wouldn't be surprised to see companies targeting this segment with other partnerships, analysts summarize. Following the news, Rusch again repeated outperform rating (i.e. Buy) on PLUG shares. (To watch Rusch's track record, click here) Plug street's current valuation presents an interesting puzzle. While the Buy 10 rating adds up to a unanimous Strong Buy consensus rating, the average price target tells a somewhat disconnected story. At $47.78, the stock is poised to fall nearly 33%, if met over the next 12 months. It will be interesting to see how much battery power there will be left pushing stocks higher after the recent surge. How much do you save on retirement per year? Instead of ignoring me, she furtively sniffed me out all her financial details (it was like a giant ice cream sundae for financial nerds): * Jessa, at 28, still owes me $15,000 in student loans, and her husband, who is 30, still owes $20,000. * They owe $12,000 on their car loan. * Jessa and her husband have a $200,000 mortgage. * He currently saves $0 on his retirement plan. (I'm sorry, but that's not enough, man.) * She and her husband need help from Facet Wealth -- a virtual full-service financial planning service with a special certified financial planner. According to a survey by Bank of America, a staggering 16% of millennials between the ages of 24 and 38 now have at least $100,000 saved for retirement. Whoohoo hooo! That's why it's a celebration. But what about Jessa? What does he need to do to get out of debt and save enough for retirement? Why Are Millennials Struggling to Save for Retirement Why are millennials like Jessa struggling to save for retirement? 1. Housing costs: Response No. 1 (37%) for millennials is the cost of housing, according to the Pension Pulse Survey. 2. Support family members financially: Millennials often support extended family members with their income. It doesn't even involve the amount you need to save to put kids through college - remember, financial aid doesn't cover everything. 3. Insufficient income: Our Money State Shares are more than half millennials (55%) do not have a retirement savings account, such as a 401(k) or IRA. Some 46% said unemployment was to blame. 4. Student loan debt: As of September 2017, the average graduate of the 2016 class owes more than $37,000 in student loan debt, according to Student Loan Hero. Yep, yep and yep, he said, when I showed you these numbers. We reached three of these four categories. I just can't afford to put money into my current retirement account. What My Millennial Colleagues Need to Do -- and Here's What You Can Do Too! Feel like a stack of percentages against you? Here's what to do next. Tip 1: Analyze interest interests As soon as I said the words interest rate, Jessa slipped on her desk chair and pretended to be asleep. I know Jessa and her husband refinanced their house this fall, and I asked about their interest rates. He only pays 3% on their home and student loans. I recommend asking Facet Wealth if they should invest in retirement more aggressively than paying down debt on their loans. (This is what I would choose!) On the other hand, if you have high interest rates on your own student loans, I recommend asking Facet Wealth about paying off debt if your loan carries a higher rate than your investment earned before tax. Tip 2: Consolidate those student loans - but there's a catch. Consider consolidating student loan payments only if you can lower payments without stretching the loan term. In Jessa's case, she could use the extra money to start aggravating her retirement savings. Tip 3: Get a crack at that retirement plan. Jessa has to save at least 10% of her income. This is a rule of thumb cited by most financial advisers and other money experts. If Jessa doesn't want to fight to keep her head above water after retirement, she needs to invest 10% of her income each year. And none of this invests just enough to get the employer's spouse crap. In most cases, it's not enough retirement savings for most people and it won't scratch the surface in the direction of creating a large nest egg. Tip 4: To get very rich, invest at least 15%. If Jessa wanted to be really rich as a passive investor, she would invest at least 15% of her income. He won't get rich Warren Buffett, of course, but if he wants at least $1 million in liquid assets beyond the value of his home, he'll shoot to save 15%. That applies to anyone who invests in retirement. Tip 5: Never, ever borrow from your retirement plan. You can lend money from your retirement account, but that's not a good idea. Jessa's retirement plan is off limits, so is your plan. Assume that the money is in lockdown. Period.Why? * You lose compound growth on your earnings. * You pay the loan with after-tax money, which means the interest you pay will be taxed again when you withdraw it at retirement (unless you borrow from a Roth 401(k). * If you leave your job, you will have to repay the loan, usually within 60 days of leaving. If you can't, you'll owe taxes on your balance and a 10% penalty as well if you're under 55.You don't want to mess things up Tip 5: Take the time to review what options are best for you. Once retirement savings are under control, you may want to look at other potential opportunities. Maybe Jessa and her husband want to dive into real estate investments or get cracked on some side hustle. Whatever it is, he needs to make sure it's worth his time and energy and can contribute to his long-term goals. Tip 6: Do your own research. Jessa is a proud proud graduate Art college, which means he's a student for life. Here's another thing he'll do to maximize his success: He'll read everything he can get. He will research funds and options in a 401 (k), read investment books, books on real estate, articles on destroying debt and more. He will absorb blog posts, listen to podcasts and develop his own investment philosophy. He will be his own advocate when it comes to his own needs, risk tolerance and more, and you can too. How Much Retirement Money Should You Aim to Save? Jessa is 28, but millennials range in age - from 24 to 38. See thumb rules for saving at any age. Goal Savings for Your 20s Accumulate 25% of your overall gross salary during your twenties. You may need to lower this amount if you have accumulated a large amount of student loan debt. Destination Savings for Your 30s Have at least one year's salary saved by the time you turn 30. If Jessa makes $100,000, she should have $100,000 saved. Savings Goals for your 30s to 40 Year Olds in your late thirties spectrum millennials should have doubled your annual salary saved. You must have four times your annual salary saved if you are 40. Steps to Get There If she's serious about getting out of debt and saving enough for retirement, Jessa has to do these three things. Step 1: Get started. This article won't help - if he (or you) didn't do anything about it. You have to take action if you really want to save enough and get out of debt. It takes time and discipline and not even too much money per month (depending on your age). Step 2: Invest aggressively, automatically. Two facts: * If you start at 24, you can have $1 million by age 69. All you need to do is save $35 a month -- and get a 10% return on your investment. Save more, and you'll become a millionaire faster. * If you start at 40, you can save $1 million by saving $561 per month, assuming a 10% return. I told Jessa that because she has saved $0 to retire at the moment, she can start saving at least $158.15 a month for 40 years with a 10% return and can still be a millionaire.$158.15 -- that's the cost of a new pair of shoes every month, I tell her. Get Facet Wealth on Your Side No one ever says, Be your own doctor. Why do you assume, then, that you should be your own financial adviser (unless you're a financial analyst or an adviser)? The question is whether the bank and its other financial backing -- including giants Capital One Financial Corp. and JPMorgan Chase & Co. -- Fresh tensions in Trump's relationship with the industry began to emerge late Monday. Deutsche Bank AG decided not to do more business with Trump or his family's company while waiting for him to pay off a loan of about $300 million in the coming years, said a person with knowledge of the situation. Manhattan-based Signature Bank, just a 10-minute walk down Fifth Avenue from Trump Tower, announced it was closing a Trump account holding about $5.3 million. Then on Tuesday, Professional Bank, which once gave him an $11 million mortgage, said it would not do more deals with the Trump Organization and would soon end its effective relationship. Capital One paid Trump and his trust as much as $2 million in interest the previous year. Until recently the bank had branches next to Trump's condominium building on Park Avenue and 59th Street in Manhattan. Some Twitter users have posted that they will close their accounts with the bank if it does not take action against Trump. As a matter of policy we do not discuss current or former customer relationships, the bank said in a statement issued by a spokesman. JPMorgan Chase Bank's largest U.S. holds as much as $6 million in three accounts for the president, mostly in savings accounts set up by his father, Fred, for Trump's benefit, filings show. JPMorgan paid Trump as much as $17,500 in interest for the year. Most of it is in the account for the Donald J. Trump Revocable Trust. The bank paid Trump as much as $102,500 in interest for 2019. Trump's commerce secretary, Wilbur Ross, was once part of a group of investors who bought BankUnited after the financial crisis. The company later became a publicly traded company. Bank representatives did not respond to messages seeking comment. First Republic BankTrump had as much as $50,000 in current accounts at the California-based lender as of July 31, filings show. There was one account, which was inactive and closed, First Republic said in a statement provided by external spokesman Greg Berardi. He refused to specify the timing or the complexity. Ladder Capital Nonbank lenders specializing in commercial real estate lent Trump $282 million from 2012 to 2016 for four Manhattan properties, according to city records and Trump's personal financial disclosures. The loan, backed by properties including its towers at 40 Wall St. and on Fifth Avenue, was bundled into securities and sold to investors. Jack Weisselberg, a loan origin executive at Ladder, declined to comment, and there was no response to messages sent to other executives. He is the son of Allen Weisselberg, the Trump Organization's longtime finance chief who previously worked for Fred Trump.Deutsche BankTrump borrowed $125 million from Deutsche Bank in 2012 to the Trump National Doral Miami resort, according to county records and Trump's personal financial disclosures. Variable-rate debt, pegged to either Libor or Prime rates, is due in 2023. He also borrowed $170 million for the Trump International Hotel in Washington in 2015 and had another 2012 loan from a German lender against his hotel/condo tower in Chicago. Both variable-rate loans are due in 2024. A Deutsche Bank spokesman declined to comment. Signature BankMost of the $5.3 million that Trump had in checking and money market accounts at Signature were withheld for Trump's rescindable trust, according to Trump's personal financial disclosures. The bank paid him as much as $105,000 in interest the year before. His daughter, Ivanka, has served on Signature's board of directors. We believe the appropriate action is the resignation of the president of the United States, which is in the best interests of our nation and the American people, the bank said in a statement. Florida-based Professional Bank holds as much as $25 million in money market accounts for trump trusts that can be revoked, paying interest of as much as $1 million for the year, according to a July filing. The bank recently established a relationship with Trump: In 2018 it provided mortgages for the purchase of a brother's home trump worth $18 million in Palm Beach across the street from Mar-a-Lago Club. The $11 million loan carries an interest rate of 4.5% and is due in 2048, according to county records and Trump's personal financial disclosures. Under-LeveragedEric Trump has described the Trump Organization as a profitable company that can partner with anyone he wants. We are one of the most underutilized real estate companies in the country, he told Bloomberg in 2019. Almost all of our assets are owned free and clear, and very few who own a mortgage are a fraction relative to the value of the asset. Despite Donald Trump's past conflicts with the financial industry -- he defaulted on loans, his companies have filed for bankruptcy and he has a penchant for prosecuting people and organizations that don't bow to his will -- there's no shortage of companies willing to give him capital or hold his money. However, this year's long outlook is encouraging due to stronger fundamental headwinds. Such a positive background tends to make investors pursue some that still offers a great recovery upside down, as they seem to have started doing YTD. It is for this reason that we would encourage investors to build their portfolios now and look at things if there is a consolidation phase that may come in Q1, writes Lecubarri. Taking the risks into account, we use the TipRanks database to find an attractive dime stock with a low price tag. The platform led us to two Strong Buy sports tickers ranked consensus from the analyst community. Not to mention the substantial upside potential is on the table. We are talking returns of at least 300% over the next 12 months, according to analysts. AcelRx Pharmaceuticals (ACRX)Opioids has made headlines in recent years, and for all the wrong reasons. These potent painkillers are also highly addictive - a factor that has led to the opioid epidemic in the US. AcelRx is a pharmaceutical company dedicated to manufacturing safer treatments for acute pain, developing synthetic opioid drugs for sublingual doses (under the tongue). The company's main product, Sufentanil, was approved by the FDA under the name Dsuvia in 2018, and by the European Union as Dzuveo in the same year. The second sublingual Sufentanil system, under the name Zalviso, has also been approved for use by the EU, and is in a Phase 3 trial in the US. In its latest earnings report, the company showed $1.4 million in the top line, driven by $1.3 million in product sales. Sales rose 433% sequentially, and total revenue rose 133% year-over-year. Against this backdrop, some Street members believe ACRX's $1.40 share price looks like a steal. Cantor analyst Brandon Folkes is excited by Dsuvia's prospects as an alternative to current opioid treatments, and he believes that potential will boost the company's stock. With the launch of Dsuvia, we believe investors' focus can now shift to rolling out metrics and peak sales potential for products. When ACRX launches a true alternative to opioid IV, we expect investors to start appreciating the value of the product. We believe that Dsuvia offers advances in the delivery of adequate pain care by eliminating the need for invasive and time-consuming IV settings in the emergency room, as well as outpatient, or postoperative, arrangements. Although the hospital launch takes time, we expect Dsuvia's uptake to push revenue upside beyond Street's current forecasts, which, in turn, could push stockpiles higher than current levels. Folkes argues. In line with its bullish stance, Folkes rates ACRX a Buy, and its $9 price target implies room for an astonishing 552% upside potential in the next 12 months. (To watch Folkes' track record, click here) Switch now to the whole Street, 3 Buy and no Holds or Sells have been published in the last three months. Therefore, ACRX has a Buy Strong. Based on an average price target of $7, the stock could jump 407% next year. (See analysis of ACRX shares in TipRanks) NuCana (NCNA)NuCana is a biopharmaceutical company focusing on new cancers The company's goal is to provide effective treatments for biliary, breast, colorectal, ovarian, and pancreatic cancers - while avoiding complications and side effects of current chemotherapy treatments. NuCana uses a chemical technology called phosphoramidate called ProTide to create a class of drugs that will go beyond the analogue limitations of the nucleotides that are behind many chemotherapy drugs. ProTides NuCana has been used in the antiviral drug Gilead Sovaldi.In Last year, NuCana announced the re-start of Phase III trials on Acelarin, the furthest drug candidate along the company's pipeline, as a treatment for bile duct cancer. The study included more than 800 patients in 6 countries and is currently underway. In November, the company published data described as 'encouraging' from a Phase Ib study of the same drug. While Acelarin is the flagship drug in the pipeline, NuCana has two other prospects under development. NUC-3373 is in a Phase I trial as a treatment for solid tumors and colorectal cancer, and NUC-7738 is the second line under investigation for application for advanced solid tumors. Of the three, colorectal studies are the furthest forward. Writing from Truist, 5-star analyst Robyn Karnauskas sees the pipeline as key to NuCana's potential investors. We believe investors have ignored the fact that NCNA is a platform company that we believe is validated, as defined by the production of clinical products. We love that it has brought 3 products to the clinic, including one new drug and two enhanced foundation kemos. The data suggested to us that the platform works and can produce better chemo [...] While investors are mostly focused on Acelarin, we believe investors should also focus on NUC-3373, another core of our platform-based thesis that has data expected by 1H2021. Karnauskas noted. To this end, Karnauskas placed a price target of $22 in NCNA, suggesting the stock has room for growth of 384% ahead of it, along with a Buy rating. (To watch Karnauskas' track record, click here) Overall, NCNA's Strong Buy consensus rating is round, and based on 4 recent reviews. The stock has an average price target of $17.33, showing a 270% one-year upside from its current trading price of $4.69.
