The Columbus destroyer played its first game in May at the national arena after a pause of several years. Just a few months later, all six Arena Football League teams were suspended in the wake of the lawsuit while the league decided on its next steps. According to a statement from the AFLRandall Beau, the insurance company that provided AFL compensation between 2009 and 2012, has filed a multi-million dollar lawsuit against the league. The Arena Football League was difficult to close team services and business divisions in the local market, but we were forced to make the necessary decisions, Boe explains. These closures result in the elimination of various staff positions and are a direct result of the current financial constraints facing the AFL. Bo also says that extensive legacy debt associated with previous league operations significantly weakens the league's functioning and growth capacity. In addition to Columbus, the league has franchises in Albany, N.Y. Victor Matheson, a sports economist at Atlantic City, New Jersey, Baltimore, Md., Philadelphia, Pa., Washington, D.C. and St. Crucifixion University, says insurance difficulties are not surprising. Because of the inherent risks involved in football, it is very difficult to get insurance for these players when they can suffer very long-term and very serious potential injuries related to the league, says Mathieson. In a tweet posted Wednesday, Boe said the league is actively evaluating the upcoming final decision in the coming weeks. According to the Associated Press, one possibility for the organization is to transform itself into a travel league modeled after the six-team Premier Lacrosse League, which has just completed its first season and is scheduled to return next year. We have not yet made the decision to suspend the operation of the entire league - we are actively evaluating the options but will make that decision in the coming weeks. I know @officialAFL love you all. We will do our best to keep everyone posted. — Randall Boe (@randallboe) On October 30, 2019, we saw a better day in terms of fan support if we were upset but not surprised by the Arena Football League. The destroyer moved from Buffalo to Columbus in 2004 and played for four years before the league declared bankruptcy in 2008. The league resumed two years later, but the destroyer did not return to Columbus until earlier this year. About 18,000 fans attended per game as the team left the city. However, the average attendance this year has dwindled to 6,500. Harry Eprem, who lives in Columbus, was a fan from the start. He was excited to see the team back this year. I still had all of my original gear like jerseys and hats and shirts, he said. So I was like, Oh, this is cool. You can go to the game again, put on your gear again, cheer for the team, cheer on the Columbus team. Yeprem said he was saddened to hear that the team's local business operations had stopped. He wants the Arena Football League to survive, but he's not convinced he wants to cheer it on without a local presence. It's disappointing, says Yeprem. If it'sLeague, unless they play a game here or have some kind of tournament, I probably wouldn't be interested because I might be interested in it. But unfortunately, this probably feels like it is. Matheson says it's not an amazing response and the travel system will be difficult to get long-term support. Rather than relying on having a team in one city and building a fan base in that city alone, we basically don't have a team to play in exhibitions across the country, it's a fun novelty event where the fans come out, so we may be able to come out for one game, Matheson said. 'It goes without saying that, but you never know it's going to work for the whole league and the whole set of teams. It's hard to create excitement for the fans when you can only watch the team once a season. Whether a small hope league for Columbus fans will continue to exist at all is still up in the air. We know that under no circumstances will we continue to operate a business operations unit in the local market, Boe said in a statement. Mathieson thinks the future is bleak. Honestly, it doesn't look good, mathieson said. And the league seems to be trying to give in to what has happened to many, many minor leagues and sports over the years. Running a professional sport is very difficult and even the biggest leagues have suffered for decades. He uses the first 20 years of the National Football League as an example. Matheson also says the fact that the league relies solely on live attendance for its fan base is hampering potential growth. If you have only six teams and you're not in the largest media market in the country, it's impossible to get any kind of state television contract, Matheson explains. 'And you're stuck trying to run a league based solely on attendance and ticket sales and it just wasn't going to do that.' Destroyers tweeted Wednesday that it will issue information about refunding applications if the team can't move forward. When you see a league folding or a league going and away for a few years, the first thing that comes to mind is, 'What happens to the money you paid in 2020?' Eprem says. Hopefully it will work if the destroyer survives, it is likely to be headquarters outside the league office, not Columbus.
