Deus omnium creator harvard

Harvard Hymn Harvard Hymn is a generous and quietly majestic Latin hymn written in the 19th century for ceremonies at Harvard University. Full words and score are available here in PDF (2 pages), while the performance synthesis of melody is available here, courtesy of the Department of Mathematics at Harvard University. Written by James Bradstreet Greno (1833-1901), a Professor of Classics at Harvard University and co-author (with Joseph A. Allen) of the still-final Latin grammar. (I own a good thumb version and I love it very much.) The anthem was composed by John Knowles Payne (1839-1906), a music professor at Harvard University, an organ player, a choir supervisor, and a talented composer. The anthem is performed every spring during the start and also every September at the end of the opening of the semester service at Harvard Memorial Church (Episcopal Church). Unfortunately, the commercial recording of the hymn does not seem to be available, although other recordings provided by the Harvard Choir are fortunately. I personally love the words (especially maiora dom Konamore Vavias Vavias, in the third verse) and the way in which the melody rises to the rise of yearning. Here's my attempt at literally translating the two lines of words. Please email me if you spot errors.
