Trail of tears questions and answers

We know-no one wants to talk about making a will. It makes us feel uncomfortable, slightly superstitious and maybe even a little dizzy. So I avoid the subject left and right and postpone making a will once again. But here you are, reading about wills (even if it gives you an eerie feeling in the pit of your stomach). You've already made it this far, and we're proud of you. So take a deep breath-we're ready to answer everything you wanted to know (but were afraid to ask) about wills. 1. What is a will? Simply put, a will is a legally binding document that explains exactly how you want your property and other items to be dealt with after your death. We know-we're not comfortable talking about this kind of thing. But as creepy as it feels, making a will is one of the most important things you can do for yourself and your family. 2. What is the difference between a living trust and a will? A living trust and a will may seem similar to the way they work, but it's different. A will tells everyone how you want things that belong to you to be dealt with after your death. A living trust keeps your assets while you're still alive. Not sure how to talk about your end-of-life desires? Use this free guide. A living trust never becomes a public document like a will does after you die. So if you want to keep everything private, a live trust protects this information even after you're gone. It can also help you skip out on the validation costs (this is the court legal process that handles giving everything in the will). Every property given through a will must go through validation, but not if it is given through a trust! Keep in mind, however, a living trust cannot name a guardian for your children (in other words, someone who will take care of them if you die) - only a will can do that. 3. Why do I need a will? You may think you don't need a will because you're not a millionaire, you don't sit on a huge piece of land, or you don't have family members who are vultures and want to claw their way into your property. But guess what? You need a will, no matter who you are. If you have children who are under the age of 18, then you really need a will. It's your will that you'll have all the information on who their guardians will be. If you don't make a will-who will take care of your children if something happens to you and your husband? Don't leave a decision like this in everyone's hands but you (especially not the statel). And what about the only watch your great-grandfather gave you? You want to make sure something like this stays in the family. Having a will in place allows you to tell exactly who gets what. If you don't take care of it now, someone else will get to decide where your children, pets and family heirlooms end up. 4. What if I haven't had kids yet? So you think since you haven't you have Still, isn't it important to make a will? False. We just said it, but it's worth repeating: Everyone needs a will! Even if it's just you and your dog living in a one-bedroom apartment. Who would take Rover if something happened to you? And if you have children later down the road or a niece you adore, you can update your will to include them. Make these 7 decisions before you create your will and take the headache out of the process. 5. Do I have to make a new will if I move between states? Not. Most states across America will honor a will signed in a different state. But if you plan to move, it's smart to check the laws again in your new state and update your will if necessary. 6. Do I have to get a contract will? You always need two witnesses to make a will valid, but you don't always need it symbolized (check the laws of your state). Getting a notary document just means that a civil servant (so-called notary common) will make sure the person signing the document is who they say they are. Some states want a document (called a self-proof affidavit) from witnesses stating that they saw them sign the will or saw someone sign for you at your request. This document also proves that you were in your right mind and signed everything willingly. Having this in place saves a lot of time in validation (remember, this is just the court legal process that takes care to give everything in the will). A little note about your witnesses, though-make sure you're leaving nothing to them in your will (because you won't get what they are!). A witness can't take anything from the will they're witnessing. So skip asking your daughter (who gets your house in the will) to be your witness and instead ask a trusted colleague or family friend. 7. Can I change or cancel my will? Absolutely! This thing isn't in stone. Nothing is permanent until you die. You can add or remove things at any time. Once you do, you will sign a new will that says the old one is no longer valid. After you sign the new will, be sure to safely get rid of your old will (slice the sucker). And if you gave copies to someone else, you can be sure that you're the one who's destroying them, too. In this way, there will be no confusion about what the right will is. And if you want to cancel your will, you can. All it means is that you destroy your old will (you know, you destroy it) and you make a new one. 8. When Should I update my will? You will need to update your will whenever your wishes change or after some kind of life event (such as marriage, bringing home a brand new baby, etc.). And you may need to update your will after any kind of unpleasant life change too (as in the case of the death of a family member or a divorce). When life changes, your will must change too. 9. After I make a will, who should I give copies to? copies? sign a will, keep a copy for yourself (duh) and give a copy of it to the person named as your personal representative (he is someone you trust who will make sure that your wishes are realized after your death). If you decide not to give them a physical copy of the will, at least let them know where you hold your will so they can get into it if they should. If you ever update your will, be sure to get rid of the copies that others have and do it yourself! If you trust them willingly, then you probably trust them a lot. Still, it's a good idea to go ahead and dissect the old document yourself. 10. What happens to my things if I don't have a will? Whether you know it or not, you already have a will in place . . . Almost. Even if you have never signed a will, there are laws in your state that handle how to sort through your property if you don't have a will. This kind of thing is called intestacy law. And that's basically a fancy way of saying the state will solve things for you if you don't have a will. But then your family is in for a mess. I'll head to the validation court for a while-and that's a real headache! When you die without a will, the court will decide things like which of your family members will take your property, your belongings and even your children who are under 18 years old (yikes!). Don't let that happen. Creating a will is one of the most important and tender things you can do for your family. Believe it or not, it's easy to make your own going online in less than 20 minutes! All you have to do is link your important information, and the rest is done for you. And best of all, this process won't put you down with a lot of nonsense legal jargon. Take this step today! Gintuit is the first FDA approved cell product, manufactured from allogeneic human cells and bovine collagen, indicated for topical (non-submerged) application to a surgically created vascular bed wound in the treatment of mucogingival conditions in adults. The defects of mucogingival are soft tissue defects that concern both the attached gums (gums) and other mouth tissue in the context with gingivitis. Conditions may be caused by anatomical, traumatic or infection-related factors. These conditions are generally associated with the loss of sufficient amounts of attached odoglyphic tissue to cause inflammation of soft tissues that is not resolved only by oral hygiene procedures. GINTUIT is not intended to provide root cover. Note: The term allogeneic refers to cells derived from a donor source that is not related to the intended recipient. The term mucogingival refers to the oral mucosa and tissues of the mouth (gums) of the mouth. The treatment regimen is a single application of GINTUIT over a surgically created vascular wound bed in the mouth. Additional information about the management of GINTUIT GINTUIT Dosage and administration of part of the approved labelling (see product link below). What are the ingredients of GINTUIT? GintUIT is a cell sheet consisting of two layers, an upper layer consisting of living human keratinocytes (the main type of cells in the outer layer of the skin) and a lower layer made of collagen derived from cattle, human extracellular matrix proteins, and living human skin fibroblasts (skin cells that produce connective tissues). The mechanism of action by which GINTUIT works to increase keratinized tissue has not been determined. In vitro studies have shown that GINTUIT secretes human growth factors and cytokines and contains extracellular uterine proteins. These factors are known to be involved in repairing and regenerating wounds. How has safety and efficacy been demonstrated? The efficacy of GINTUIT was evaluated in two clinical studies in adults with insufficient gums. In each of the two studies, GINTUIT was associated with an increase of at least 2 mm of sedal tissue in at least 50% of study participants. Overall clinical trial safety data for GINTUIT included 121 individuals from both studies. What are the common side effects with GINTUIT? Common side effects observed during clinical trials with GINTUIT included sinusitis (inflammation of the sinuses), nasopharyngitis (inflammation of the upper neck, upper respiratory tract infection, foot-and-mouth mouthitis (scar wounds), and local reactions at the site of surgery such as pain and redness. Additional information on side effects can be found on approved labelling; who should not take GINTUIT; GINTUIT should not be used in patients with oral infections or in patients with known allergies to bovine collagen. Where can I find additional information about GINTUIT?
