Lompoc unified school district superintendent

Photo: shutterstock.com You don't need children to understand that good public schools support the value of homes in their boroughs. And while higher-quality schools often come with higher property taxes, homeowners in such counties are eventually returned through higher house prices. Getting returns sounds great, but how much are we talking about? New research from Realtor.com shows that to enter a desirable school district, 9% of buyers say they will pay 11% to 20% on the budget. Separately, 17% reported they wanted to pay more to be close enough for their children to walk to and from school. Related: 7 Renovation Tips to Boost Resale ValueIn the showdown between amenities for adults and education for kids, you guessed it: the kids win. Realtor.com found that 62% of buyers would pass a spa at home if it meant going into the appropriate school district. 50% will admit easy access to shopping, while 44% will give up space in the form of a bonus room. If the home you plan to sell is located in a highly coveted school district, do everything in your power to highlight that fact in all your real estate marketing materials. Many potential buyers are parents of children currently in the school system, so be sure to get the word out between neighbors and local friends. If you're buying a home, use a search engine that lets you filter by school district, as county boundaries don't always match town, village, and city streets. After all, you cannot assume that your children will be prescribed to attend the same school as the kids down the block or even next door. The U.S. Department of Education's National Center for Education Statistics provides such a tool, and Great Schools offers a similar tool. Once the correct school district has been identified, it is still sometimes necessary to find out which school is specified. This can be done by calling the local school district. Many larger school districts, including Los Angeles and New York school districts, offer online search engines that use the requester's home address to identify the school that was specified.
