Brittany Donegal - a devout Christian allegedly killed by starvation who discovers she has the capacity of immortality. Initially believing that her ability is a divine gift to kill Kane and Drake, Brittany bonds with Drake and wraps her body with him, and is manoetered by the Gaiapa to accept him as her God. Critical reception reviews have generally been mixed to positive, though many note the success of Gone in its intended population. Mel Pitt, for the Guardian, pointed to rave reviews of the series, most of which were posted on websites by teenagers, but noted that such success was due to literary victims turning characters into crude 2D digitisation. Amanda Craig, for The Times, noted that Gone was heavily influenced by TV series such as Lost and Heroes, describing the book as smart but a little too predictable. Jane Howarth, of the Birmingham Post, called it a great go and said she found the book full of suspense, action and supernatural. Think of a strong combination of Lord of the Flies, Heroes and Lost and you get an idea of the audience it will attract. Describing the novel's rhythm as crazy, and crazy, Howarth concluded: it's an amazing mystery story, with twists and faces, camuses and heroes, to keep readers immersed... Violent in parts, Grant doesn't dwell on displaying the wild nature of human beings when faced with a world without order. Undeniable. Dina Hall, who reviewed Lies for The Sunday Telegraph, also drew a comparison with the fly-owner and lost, writing: Although it will never be about the GCSE curriculum, she certainly has the addictive appeal of a cult TV series... I'll sell my soul in the next chapter. Toby Clements, who reviewed hunger for The Daily Telegraph, wrote: The world is a difficult but thought-provoking, Stephen King novel for young people in which children are challenged for redesigning society while fighting evil. Hunger should be required to call any boy who thinks adults suck. Stephen King also praised the series and wrote: These are moving stories and tensions told in a narrative that flocks and a flood that doesn't lift. There are children with crazy superpowers, there's the mystery of where all the adults went. Most of all, there are children I can believe in and encourage. That's a great fiction.
