The complete suicide manual reddit

geefitch-deflated20140901:The Complete Guide to Suicide (完RELL自殺マニュアル Kanzen Jisatsu Manyaru, lit. Full Suicide Guide) is a Japanese book written by Wataru Tsurumi. The book was first published on July 4, 1993 and sold more than a million copies. This 198-page book provides explicit descriptions and analysis on a wide range of suicide methods such as overdose, hanging, jumping and carbon monoxide poisoning. This is not a suicide manual for the terminally ill. There is no preference presented for painless or dignified ways to end a person's life. The book provides an assessment of each method in terms of the pain it causes, the required preparation effort, the appearance of the body and lethality. A few years ago, I found a fine translation of the book's introduction and just pulled out a document that I copied and glued it to. I, Giftch, didn't translate it myself, but I cleaned it up as much as possible to make it more understandable. Some of the pieces are still a little fuzzy, but you understand the fermentation. I do not condemn nor beg for suicide by publishing it, but rather the complete guide of suicide is one of my many morbid interests and I find the introduction quite disturbing. It means a lot. This book is found on bodies in the famous Aokiaghara Forest and the introduction itself provides a very dark insight into a certain youth and young mindset at a very particular time in Japan's history - a time that has seen the aftermath of the bubble collapse of the economy (known as the Lost Decade), the waves stretching far and wide across the country - among other things the usual factors (discussed in the following text.) culturally. I feel it's some impressive and unique things. So, yes, I just wanted to add some perspective there. I really shouldn't give a trigger warning here but if you're feeling depressed at the moment, I'd definitely let it miss. Anyway, have fun. The complete guide of the introduction to suicide This book describes the methods of suicide in detail. It wasn't written by people who tried to kill themselves many times, and it wasn't written to explain the reasons behind suicide. Although the book can be treated as a record of events, the entire book follows the main purpose of showing someone how to commit suicide. A long time ago, the subject of why do young people commit suicide? Discussed by various parties. In the 1970s, the conclusions were something like nihilism, the age of grief. Nevertha, the questions, why can't I kill myself? Never really solved. A book is needed, which can help one commit suicide, take actual actions, but not only has the idea in mind. Books with such purposes were previously published ten years ago - the ways to commit suicide is an example. However, the book was well organized and boring. We just need to know the ways to kill ourselves, not any other unrelated things. In America, a scholar invented a machine, allowing mercy killing to be put into practice. And this book will be the only suicide machine in Japan that uses words. Speaking of which, I'd like to start introducing drug overdoses. But to help you understand the question of why we should kill ourselves now? Better, and other commercial reasons... I need to talk about other things first. A student revolt took place 20 years ago. I've been waiting for my time to show off my ability. Everyone thought someone big would turn up. The Apollo landed on the moon. The oil crisis. The Soviet Union's invasion of other countries. I thought my actions would affect the whole world. But it just caused a little quake, only a wall collapsed. The students stood up to each other and smiled. Excellent hotel and the rebellion will end... In the late 1980s, there was a trend of faith at the end of the world, and talking about dangerous themes, the famous bands performing songs about Chernobyl, the jokes that came out of the children's mouths were delicious from death, girls prepared for world war by searching for a mate. And we cheered beliefs like the appearance of the strong, tomorrow may be the end of the world. The end of the world didn't appear, the atomic bombs remain intact, the dream of a global nuclear war disappeared. The revolution of the '80s was very depressed. Finally, everyone realized there would be no time to show off their ability, the 22nd century must come. (Of course, the 21st century is coming, there will be no world war.) There will never be the end of the world. We stretched our arms out into outer space, but it can't give us enough satisfaction. If we want more excitement, if we really want the world to end, we need to do something. This long profession is useless to say it's boring and boring. We're all unlucky. We were born on this stage of past events. We'll wake up at 7:00 in the morning, or we'll go on to work or we'll go to school later. We'll repeat the pointless speeches. At school, we continue to recede English vocabulary, history, the degrees of government. At work, we keep saying pointless things while we continue to work on various pointless projects, for a few weeks, a few months or a few years. New inventions will be presented at a slow pace. The Haitian politician will continue to accept bribes. Tv shows continue to bring excitement to its audience at a slow pace. After we turn off the TV, it'll just be another normal day. Yukio Mishima once wrote the lines, ordinary life is even worse than war. We endured the nervousness caused by the creepy life, in exchange for the ridiculously calm and bright future. We have to be careful throughout our lives, trying in vain to avoid mistakes. There's no happy ending like those in the Comedies. Happiness continues to move again at a slow pace. yes, the key is over and over and at a slow pace. Significant events continue to resopping over and over again at a slow pace. It's the first element that leads to suicide. Another brick in the wallA bridge maze A suicide event took place in Japan in 1978.Two sisters living in Toyuma, Japan were found dead, hanging from a tree. In the diary that belonged to one of the two sisters, four straight lines and several side lines were drawn on one of the pages, creating a maze (a type of game that found the root by following the drawn lines). Under the diagram were found below: Japanese, commit suicide, ROS, three houses (families will be eligible for Sugunt Tokugawa). Those incomprehensible words. The line drawn on that particular page led to suicide. Their parents did not understand the motive behind their daughters' decision to commit suicide, so the conclusion was formed that the girls had died in the maze. Ros was thought to mean Rolling Stones, because the page also carried phrases like Japanese, I hate Asian. Neverth neverthonty, no one can understand the true meaning of the words on this page. A judge once said that a man's life is more important than Earth. It's a pitiful misunderstanding of the fact. Just like what the two girls realized, life is as fragile and unim matters as it can be, just like Japanese and ROS. In the late 1950s, U.S. investigators said they all seemed to have no power. In the late 1970s, rock bands sang We are a brick in the Wall. Even in the '90s, that situation hasn't changed in Japan, just like back in the day, we're still brick in the wall. The proof is, assume one of us is dead; There must be a replacement for the deceased very soon. Anyone can be replaced by someone else. Therefore, no politician warrants assassination. It's just one less brick in the wall, the wall won't collapse. Everyone lacks power, it doesn't matter if we exist or not. Life doesn't matter. It's the second element that leads to suicide. Orangewa Time, people who have no power, keep doing the same things over and over again. We forgot the feeling of being alive. We can't tell if we're alive or dead. Do you feel like you're alive now? At this point, only a fine line separates the living from the dead. So the adage, life is valuable, you don't have to commit suicide, if you stay alive, everything will be a turning point, your friends and relatives will feel sad about your death, so you have to stay alive and all can be put away; They're not convincing any longer. The compelling words that can prevent a person from committing suicide disappear. The signal for committing suicide is revealed, yes, you can kill yourself. If you feel discomfort, resentment or even pain in your daily life at school or work, you can take one step across this fine line to death. No one can stop you. Just like in previous paragraphs, nothing will change even if you stay alive and continue to face these challenges. Although we have no extraordinary powers, we can still know what will happen to ourselves or society in the future. Future! Future! It's useless even though it's convincing. Your life will basically grow and get your education in your hometown. You'll be attending supplemental classes hoping to get a good result in exams. You're going to go into high school or university and wash over a few years before you start your career at a local company. If you're a man, you'll get married between the ages of 25 and 30 and give your first child the following year. You will face a number of changes in your profession, at most you will be promoted as a manager. You're going to retire at 60, and you're going to spend the rest of your life enjoying your habits. Finally, you're facing death. That's what you're going to get. And depressingly, it's the ideal life in many people's minds. If that's the case, living a normal life is meaningless. You live like you're the chicks on farms, designed to be consumed in the future. You get the life to live. You're not living your life. Therefore, putting this full end at an appropriate time is not a matter of feeling down, thinking it won't happen twice or fear that the decision will trigger massive chain effects.Suicide is a positive act. Anjala Dusty has a boyfriend. He has a drug called angel dust. People feel overwhelmed after taking it and will be able to jump off a high-rise building without feeling anything. He put the drug in a metal follicle and pinned it to the chain, bringing it with it wherever it went. He says, I can take the drug and lose whenever I need to. My boyfriend doesn't have a steady job. He lives in idleness and is very happy about it. I hope this book can be your little metal follicle necklace. (Source: Wikipedia) (Source: Wikipedia)
