One of my favorite things to do every Christmas season is to drive or walk through the neighborhoods and catch glimpses of festive Christmas trees in the living room windows, adorned with lights, garlands and ornaments. Decorating a Christmas tree is a centuries-old tradition in many households. More than 95 million households in the United States posted a Christmas tree in 2018, according to a survey by the American Christmas Tree Association. The elements that go into decorating a Christmas tree — lights, garland, garland and ornaments — are familiar to almost everyone. But when it comes to creating a holiday tree that expresses your style, personality, heritage and environment, the options are virtually limitless. The best Christmas trees are filled with layers of souvenirs, traditions and ornaments, handcrafted and purchased in stores. Not sure how you want to decorate your tree this year? We have many Christmas tree theme ideas, with handmade ornamental ideas that allow you to put a personal touch on your holiday décor. Once you've found your inspiration, follow our three easy steps to decorate a Christmas tree like a pro. Getting a dazzling holiday tree doesn't have to be hard work. All it takes is an understanding of how the elements work together and some easy-to-follow tips from our tree decorating pros. We will show you how to decorate a Christmas tree professionally. Remember: It is more important for the family to decorate together than to strive for a perfect placement. But these three steps will make sure that your tree is both loved and beautiful. The first step in how to decorate a Christmas tree is to add the lights. Tree lights typically come on green or white strands of wire, although you can also find black variations now, perfect if you happen to have a black Christmas tree. Choose the strand color that matches your tree so that the wire will be hidden. Lighting up your Christmas tree from the inside out will give it the most dynamic look. Start at the base of the trunk and work your way up, wrapping lights around each main branch, moving from trunk to tip and back. The branches you work your way around the tree. Here are four popular types of Christmas lights to choose from when decorating your tree. These Christmas tree lights, which come in a variety of sizes and colors, are the most popular type of tree lights. They can also be used outdoors. They warm the branches of a real tree, which will release the smell of pine in the room. Buy: 300-Light 300-Light Incandescent Light Set, $9, Home Depot These Christmas tree lights are newer than traditional incandescent lamps and do not produce heat. They are usually more expensive, but they are fireproof, fireproof, and completely safe to decorate a Christmas tree with. Buy It: Northlight 100ct LED Mini Christmas Lights, $17, Target Experience with different lighting systems until you find one you like, it's OK to mix and match the lights. For example, a background of white or light lights can be highlighted with splashes of colored lights that envelop the outer areas of the tree. There are no firm rules for decorating a Christmas tree when it comes to draping garland. To prevent the branches from swelling between well cinched garland strands, start at the top of the tree, and slowly increase the amount of garland between each wave as you work your way down the branches. Plan to use about two strands of garland for each vertical tree foot. To avoid a busy look at your tree, decorate your Christmas tree with a variety of plain fancy garlands. Thin, beaded garlands appear to be best hung from branch to branch; thicker paper, ribbon, or foil garlands appear best wrapped loosely around the entire tree. If you still need a wreath, consider making one this holiday season. Decorating a Christmas tree with ribbon is a popular alternative to a garland. Loosely wrap the wide, patterned ribbon around the entire tree in horizontal strips. To add interest, try making large bows from a similar ribbon and using them to decorate tree branches. Once you know how to decorate a tree with ribbon, try amputating it using the ribbon vertically on the tree, creating cascading ribbon streams from the top of your tree to the base, tucking the ends under your tree topper, and fixing it around the trunk at the base. Editor's Tip: Try one of our favorite Christmas tree decorating ideas. Fold the ribbon towards the trunk of your tree to create a beaked look. The last step in decorating your tree is to hang your Christmas ornaments. Here's what to consider when adding Christmas tree decorations. To highlight your favourite ornaments, place them first in prime positions on the tree. Then hang your biggest ornaments, spacing them evenly around the tree. The ornamental balls in one color but several sizes and textures will create continuity from top to bottom. Hang the bigger ones on the bottom, the more Upstairs. Fill around these ornaments with medium and small ornaments. Be sure to hang some ornaments closer to the trunk to create depth and interest. They reflect the light to make your tree shine from the inside. Make the tree yours by adding specialized items, such as handmade ornaments, clip-on ornaments, or ice cubes. Complete the look with a simple tree topper and a festive tree skirt. Step back and study your tree from different angles (we recommend you squint your eye to determine if there are any empty areas to fill related: How to put Christmas lights on a tree like a Pro Home Topics Holiday ChristmasEvery editorial product is selected independently, whether we can be compensated or receive an affiliate commission if you buy something through our links. 1/10 ShutterstockThe first decision you need to make when it comes to setting up a tree in your home is whether you want an artificial or real Christmas tree. Real (or living) trees offer the complete Christmas experience. Travelling to choose one on the local land is a great way to establish an annual tradition of memory and support local arborists, and once they are in your home real trees give a woody pine smell that is sure to put everyone in a festive holiday atmosphere. But real trees are also more work to maintain and last only one season, requiring a replacement each year. Fake Christmas trees, on the other hand, require very little maintenance and can be used year after year. You can also get creative and build your own alternative Christmas tree. In the end, the real and fake trees each come with a set of pros and cons and decide between the two will come down to personal preference. 2/10 Shutterstock / Nina BudayAfter your purchase, you must decide the best location for the Christmas tree in your home. Ideally, you want the tree in a very visible place with great natural lighting and high ceilings. A hooked branch could bring it all knocking over, so if you have young children or energetic animals, you should strongly consider tucking your tree into a corner. It might take some reorganization of the furniture, but try to position your tree so that it is the focal point of a room. If your furniture is usually centered around a television, consider moving the accent from the room to the tree for the holiday season to help foster conversation and family time. Also, don't forget to put your tree near a socket so you don't have to run extension cords across the room to power the lights. 3/10 Shutterstock/ Lost_in_the_MidwestOne the only maintenance-related tasks that come with artificial trees is the fluffing of branches. After nearly a year of being stuffed in a box in storage, the branches of your artificial tree will be hit and clumped together. In order to correct this, pull each individual branch so that it looks like a real tree. As a general rule, artificial trees come in sections (base, and high), and it's easier to water branches one section at a time. Install the base of your tree, then completely shape the branches of the lowest section before adding another section on top. This will make it easier for you to access the branches near the inner middle of the tree so that no section passes without fluff. Also make sure to wear gloves while you fluff: your hands will thank you thank you they are not scratched later. 4/10 Shutterstock / Igor NikushinOnce your tree is fully set up in the ideal location, it's time to start the decorating process. Christmas lights should light up on the tree before anything else. Before you put them on the tree, test your light strands to make sure they are working properly. Then you can either fix the broken lights or buy new ones. Start at the bottom and work your way up, weaving each strand between the branches without straddling the cords. A good way to check if you have any tree covered is to turn off the rest of the lights in the room, step back and squint to your fully lit Christmas tree. This will cause all bare sections to stand out as obvious dark spots. Adjust and rearrange the lights, filling these dark spots until the lights are evenly distributed throughout the tree. 5/10 Shutterstock/TanaChlt is quite common for people to decorate their trees with any random assortment of ornaments that have been passed down through family generations and collected over time, giving the tree a personal, family and organic feel. But if you're planning to decorate a little more deliberately, you're going to want to choose a theme right away. There are many ways to decorate a Christmas tree so that it looks consistent and elegant. But choosing a theme is the best way to give your tree an elegant look while keeping it from looking cluttered and too cluttered. Common themes include red and green, red and gold, and white checkered trees with colorful ornaments have also become popular recently. 6/10 Shutterstock/TanaChDecorating a tree takes a little more effort and planning than just throwing the ornaments on all the branches are closest to you. If you hang beaded garlands or ribbon on the tree, do so before you start hanging other Christmas ornaments. Decorations should be evenly spaced around the entire tree, even those parts that are not directly in sight. If your tree is located in the corner of a room, pull it away from the wall while you decorate so that you will have easier access to each side. Natural trees may have some thin or bare spots where there simply aren't as many branches. Try filling these bare spots with decorations that naturally take up more space, such as larger ornaments, pompons or bows. If a bare spot cannot be filled, place the tree so that the empty area is harder to see or, at best, completely hidden. 7 / Shutterstock/ Marie C Fields The gap between breakfast on Christmas morning and your big family dinner in the late afternoon can be long. Edible ornaments are a great way to give people something to nibble on while they snuggle up around the tree and open gifts. Understanding how to decorate a Christmas tree with food can be a fun challenge, too. Brin set popcorn, chain chain Christmas cookies, open a few packets of sugar canes and hang it all in the branches on Christmas morning to give people a snack that will help them feed through the ordeal of unwrapping gifts. 8/10 Shutterstock / AMC ImagesAfter having studied the tree and hung the ornaments, it's time to turn your attention to below the branches. The base of a Christmas tree can be decorated in several ways, most of which are used to cover the ugly metal Christmas tree stand. Try a tree necklace or skirt. 9/10 Jacob Lund/ShutterstockThe jewel of a Christmas tree is the topper you place on its highest branch. The traditional tree topper is a golden star, intended to symbolize the star of Bethlehem that appears in the history of the Nativity in the Bible. But there are other options, too, from doll versions of angels and Santa Claus to carefully attached bows. Try to go with the topper that completes the theme of the rest of your decorations the best. 10/10 via amazon.comThe tradition of hiding a pickle in a Christmas tree is strange, and there are several unconfirmed theories as to where, when and why the practice began. Regardless of how it started, hiding a pickle and then rewarding a prize to the person who finds the ornament is a fun game that can add a bit of competitive spirit to more casual Christmas mornings.
