Wheeling - School districts in West Virginia are beginning to analyze options for safely reopening buildings that come safely in the next fiscal year in the fall. The West Virginia Department of Education (WVDE) came up with three scenarios at a state board of education meeting Wednesday, including four schooling days a week, lunch in the classroom and a school bus mask. State Schools Superintendent Clayton Birch said during the meeting that while the plan is up to the county, it's unlikely students will return to the classroom five days a week. Dr. Kim Miller, superintendent of ohio county schools, told MetroNews on Thursday that her district will have ongoing discussions with WVDE and make adjustments closer to August. However, we know that we intend to take a number of steps to keep students and staff safe, Miller said. We make mistakes on the side of caution, but what is best for our students is to put them in the classroom with their teachers. We know we missed a lot of time teaching in the classrooms every school district in the state, where students return to the classroom in August after five months because covid-19 closed in March. Miller said her county will struggle on arrival while it finishes its current school year strong in service and has hundreds of students participating in the summer rich program. We always know there will be a summer slip where we will be done and we know the slide will be bigger, Miller said. We know it now and we have already started preparing as our teachers know. They've already seen the goals that are priorities and what we have to revisit when we get back one-on-one. The three outlines released Wednesday by Birch and the board included a safe at home/school safety plan that included four days-a-week on-person classes aimed at conditions for primary school children and cleaning up the fifth day. The second scenario is a blended learning delivery model that balances person-to-person and online learning five days a week. The third outline is the second wave of COVID-19 with no person course. School State Superintendent Clayton Birch We want our youngest learners, pre-K to fifth graders, to be there four to five days a week. They are the most vulnerable and they are a group that really struggles to learn independently on their own. They need consistency, Birch said on Thursday's Metro News Talkline. But if we have the ability to do virtual schools, we want middle school and high school districts to be flexible and think creative scheduling. Birch said, adding that school superintendents have already called in Offices with more ideas following Wednesday's meeting or district may consider starting earlier than usual to take advantage of The August. Miller said Ohio County will work with state boards, its board of trustees, teachers, staff, parents and students to select the appropriate model. I think everyone would like to see us back at school after the traditional setting, she said. Ideally, they have the opportunity to lift the state of emergency and ideally return to the classroom. We know we do rigorous cleaning to make our children as safe and socially discrete as possible, but the best way to educate is face-to-face. The Ohio County School, one of the state's largest districts and home to Wheeling Park High School, performed a senior salute for those students in May, but Miller said plans remain for a direct graduation for August 2 at the Wesbanco Arena with a backup plan for Wheeling Island Stadium. And the superintendent of the Monongalia County School told Metro News affiliate WAJR that his district has initiated an analysis of the state's plans and is putting together an internal team to solidify the plan. One option is blended learning, where you can create a schedule of what your person lessons think in combination with remote learning. Said.
