The play centers on the infamous 1991 Crown Heights uprising that pitted Black American and Jewish communities against each other. For those who remember the tragic incidents, a 7-year-old Black boy named Gavin Cato was struck by a car driven by an Orthodox Rabbi driver and an Australian Jewish student, Yankel Rosenbaum, was then stabbed during the riots. What makes Fires in the Mirror such a unique and poignant experience is because all roles are played by the only actor. When Deveare Smith first conceived, wrote, and starred in her groundbreaking play, she captured men and women, boys and girls, Black, Afro-Caribbean and Jewish residents of Brooklyn with certain specifics that transformed theatergoers every time. What makes this iteration of play so important is the thoughtfulness and reflection Michael Benjamin Washington brings to this work. The game is a test of time. I know that may seem like a banate, but so many monologues could be written just yesterday. The feelings of hurt, recoiling, guilt, misunderstanding, loss and fear are all relevant concepts and conversations still circulating throughout the Black Community, and especially in the Black Community of Brooklyn. Back to Michael Benjamin Washington. I have been a fan of his comedic chops since he stole scenes every one time on 30 Rock almost a decade ago. I'm definitely curious to see Washington on stage, especially after seeing rave reviews of his Broadway appearance last year in the Boys band. Washington was approaching a role with tenderness and understanding I have rarely seen. With subtle changes in glasses, a scarf, a hat or even a cup of tea, Washington transformed itself into a Jewish housewife, a young Haitian girl, a frustrated Black young man, a prominent Rabbi and even the Rev. Al Sharpton. He conducted himself without intermission for one hour and fifty minutes. I won't give up too much play because many of you can choose to see it. However, when the game ended, I was suspicious of a standing ovation only lasting a few minutes of respect for Washington's plausible exhaustion. Every sweat bead, and every hot tear that quietly rolled down his cheek was a small reminder of the suffering of the community, but also a reminder of the sheer effort and love he brought to every role he embodies. If you are so inclined, I suggest you try to see this game before it leaves. It shows Manhattan's Signature Theatre at 480 West 42nd Street and is directed by Saheem Ali. Fires in the mirror show until December 8. I suggest you don't miss this moving art.
