Posted in: Learners Stories Ani loves a lot of things, photography, videography, coding, programming, Taiko game (a Japanese drum) and lighting design jobs at a local theater. With her many interests, she is not sure what her future professional holds, but at 15 she began taking The Global Freshman Academy (GFA) courses through edX and Arizona State University to help decide on a field of concentration, and prepare her for... Read more about Ani: Exploring the future through Global Student at The Maricopa County Academy - including Phoenix, Tempe and surroundings - exceeds the U.S. average in terms of the percentage of the population holding at least one bachelor's degree, according to the U.S. census. Tempe is home to Arizona State University, while neighboring towns such as Glendale, Mesa and Scottsdale have community colleges. The city of Phoenix is home to five community colleges, including GateWay Community College. The largest campuses are Phoenix College and Paradise Valley Community College, but they enroll just over 3,000 full-time students, with some programs geared to small classrooms and hands-on study. These colleges focus equally on career preparation and student positioning to transfer to four-year colleges across the state and beyond. For private colleges, non-profits and universities, the city of Phoenix has two options, both affiliated with the Baptist Church. The University of Ottawa maintains a campus here, and focuses specifically on adult and professional students, with a primary focus on masters in counseling. Arizona Christian University offers bachelor's degrees in a wide variety of subjects. Phoenix is home to a number of colleges and universities, offering a number of certificate programs, as well as associate, bachelor's and graduate degrees. Mesa Community College (MCC) is part of the Community College District one of the largest such districts in the country. Big is the theme here from the expansive area Phoenix urban oasis to the extensive educational opportunities found throughout Maricopa County. True to form, MCC thinks great with its online programs and information for students of all kinds. Mesa Community College students can choose from more than 500 online courses and numerous programs that lead to diplomas or associated certificates. Grade options include an associate in the arts program, as well as business pieces, such as international trade, business communication and real estate. Other possible specializations range from justice studies to retail management. In addition, several distance education programs offer certificates of completion in a selection of topics covering emergency management, organizational leadership, business music, salesmanship and small business start-ups. Distance education is not limited to curricula. Among the many offerings for e-learning are unique classes on herbal remedies, computer operations for agribusiness or Native American Indian history in the Southwest. Students can also meet the requirements of general education with distance learning courses in topics such as Arabic culture or 19th century women writers. To suit many options for online studies, some MCC courses also allow students to choose either fully online or hybrid ways of learning. The MCC points out that learning goals and transfer value are the same for web-based classes as for their traditional campus-based counterparts. To support e-students, the college offers online resources including a help center, tutoring, library access and tutorials on the use of the Canvas learning management system. Canvas is designed to provide secure access to course materials, email, discussion forums, online questionnaires, notes and other course information. While content for online degree and certificate programs is delivered fully online, MCC students should be warned that proctored exams may be required.
