What is a pseudohernia? It is a limited protrusion of Panzerwrecks 16: Bulge abdominal wall without an evident muscle or aponeurotic defect. are infrequent and Panzerwrecks 16: Bulge commonly recognized than post-herpetic neuralgia.

Such motor neuropathies include ptosis and foot drop as well as the unusual complication of post-herpetic abdominal pseudohernia PHAP.

Development of PHAP occurs from viral damage to motor branches of thoracic nerves innervating abdominal muscles. The resulting laxity of these muscles results in a unilateral abdominal bulge.

This can produce anxiety in the patient and concern in their physician. Such unease can lead to unnecessary biopsies and other diagnostic procedures as well as to excisional surgical procedures. Therefore, it is essential that this complication of herpes zoster be recognized. Patients should be reassured that the PHAP will eventually resolve and they should not be concerned Panzerwrecks 16: Bulge any serious underlying medical problems.

Like postherpetic neuralgia, PHAP resolves in a few months. It is not known, however, whether acute antiviral therapy will help PHAP resolve faster.

It is speculated that intervention with gabapentin may benefit damage to the motor nerves as it does for sensory nerves and it is sometimes used to treat PHAP. In conclusion, physicians need to be as aware of the potential of motor neuropathies following herpes zoster Panzerwrecks 16: Bulge they are the results of damage to the sensory nerves.
