The art and practice of divining the past, the present and the future by using tea leaves, or by the interpretation of the shapes and forms that are made by tea leaves that remain in the cup after the tea has been drunk.

This type of divination is also performed by the reading of coffee grounds, especially in the Middle Eastern tradition, or the reading of wine sediments. Oenomancy practice the Romans were fond of. The sediment left at the bottom of any drinking cup has always been considered of great importance in predicting the drinker's future, no matter what the original contents. Almost anything can therefore be used, and some people prefer to use the dregs of their coffee or the lees of their wine, interpreting them as for tea leaves.

The ancient Chinese used to take divination omens from the inside of bells. Their handleless teacups, when inverted, looked like small bells, and so teacups became associated with the bell omens. Tasseography depends largely upon the diviner's traditions and psychic intuition, like most divinatory techniques. Nevertheless, the general agreement is that for true tea-leaf Scrying for Beginners: Tapping into the Supersensory Powers of Your Subconscious you need a teacup having a wide mouth and sloping sides, with an inner surface smooth, free of decorations, either white or plain pastel color, and some tea made with loose, large tea leaves, and just a little tea dust.

You should definitely not use tea bags. The tea is then drunk or poured away. The cup should be shaken well and any remaining liquid drained off in the saucer.

The diviner then interprets the pattern of tea leaves in the bottom of the cup. Shapes and figures are then prophetically interpreted.
