He had been Engaged in Sin and kind. He smiled patiently at her even as he refused her offer. He pressed a Engaged in Sin of coins into her shaking hands, Engaged in Sin he tipped up her chin to look at her.

One look and she was bewitched. Take the money and use it to go home to your family. Nothing could have been further from the truth for her. The money had not lasted long. Her mother had needed so much laudanum for her pain. Eventually Anne had been forced to do what the gentleman had warned her not to. Now, five years later, she was about to do the very thing she Engaged in Sin failed to do that first night outside the theatre.

Engaged in Sin was going to convince Engaged in Sin Duke of March to bed her. This time she was not in London. And this time the duke was her captive quarry. He was sprawled out in front of her on the carpet, more than six feet of brawny, tanned, naked male.

His long legs were splayed apart, his bare buttocks relaxed. Engaged in Sin black hair fell in a mess of waves to his shoulders. An empty brandy decanter lay by his Engaged in Sin hand. He appeared to be dead to the world. Was he only unconscious? If he had polished off an entire decanter of brandy, could he have drunk himself to death? She glanced to the study door. For privacy, she had closed it behind her.

Should she summon the odd, terrifying butler Engaged in Sin had met her at the door? She really did not wish to deal with the butler again. Lifting her hems, Anne hurried to the naked duke and crouched beside him. Her body cast a shadow over his face, but she could see scars on his cheek above the haze of thick black stubble.

His lips were full and soft. They appeared completely motionless. Her throat dried. She bent close and felt his breath whisper over her cheek.

Engaged in Sin he gave a low, rasping snore, and Anne choked on a relieved giggle. Should she shake him awake? Would summoning help end with her Engaged in Sin out on her rump? She shivered. The room was damp and chilly even though it was late August. Drawing off her gloves, she brushed her fingertips over the bronzed shoulder in front of her.

His skin was cool. A silk throw lay across a wing chair. She plucked it up. The chill of his skin made her feel cold; it made her shiver once more, just for him. Gently, she arranged the blanket over his smooth, muscled back. She tugged it down to his slim waist, to cover his hips, buttocks, and legs.

Any woman would quiver, faced with such male beauty, but she knew there was fear beneath the tremble of her shoulders. A man this strong could easily hurt her. He had been kind to her once, so long ago, but she now intended to lie her way into his bed. First she had to wake him. She gently touched his forehead to brush back his hair. A scream flew out into the room. He pushed her down to the floor. His big hands pinned her shoulders and he was braced over her, his legs on either side Engaged in Sin her hips.

His knees pressed into her skirts. She stared up into his eyes. I am the woman the Earl of Ashton sent. She prayed he believed it.

His gaze still focused over Engaged in Sin head. Everyone in England knew the hero of war, the Duke of March, had miraculously survived a bayonet wound to the head that should have killed him, but he had lost his sight. A deep scar disappeared into his hair. His head Engaged in Sin, then he rolled off her, landing hard on his side on the floor. You are the whore he thought would heal me with pleasure? She still did at the word whore. Even though she had been one for a very long time.

He spoke with such a dismissive tone, her stomach churned. As saucy as a paid ladybird should. After all, I had direction from Lord Ashton to see you. I do not understand why you would engage such an odd creature as your butler. Do you wish to frighten callers away? She hissed in pain. The duke reached for her. She took his hand and Engaged in Sin pulled her upright. But why in Hades did you creep up on me without announcing yourself? I entered alone and found you asleep.

He must not have shaved for many days. I could have killed you. Could he really have killed her and then, when it was far too late, discovered she was no danger to him at all? Should she run from him now, before he hurt her? She almost snorted at her own cowardly foolishness. Where Engaged in Sin she go? Back to London to face the noose? Surely she had nothing to fear around him if she was careful.

She had been raised as a lady until she and her mother had fled from their home. She saw his bare chest rise on a long, sharp breath.

But Engaged in Sin he let out all that air in a whoosh, he groaned. Raw panic flared. That was how he put it. He thought you should have some pleasure. That it would make you. You could be the most voluptuous beauty in England for all I know. Not seeing you is only frustrating me.

Fear was coursing through her, making her ice cold. Madame had kept her exclusively for valued customers, had charged the earth for her. The men had willingly paid the exorbitant price, because they wanted her. He was correct: If he wanted to, he could hurt her badly. Once more, fear rippled through her veins, but Engaged in Sin forced herself to speak.
