A book for those who believe in gender equality, self-expression and the right to be who we are. Girls, just like boys, have the right to be scruffy, untidy, hyper, to do any job they like, not to be princesses, to love whoever they like. Boys have as much right as girls to cry, to play with dolls, to wear pink, to like reading, not to be superheroes, to fall in love with anyone they like. Endorsed by Amnesty International Ireland. A must read for all ages. After graduating from studies in humanities and literature, she became a psychologist. She has been practising this profession since in a hospital for teenagers in the Paris region.

These rights are all interrelated, interdependent and indivisible. The United Nations set a common standard on human rights with the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in 1948. Although the Declaration is not part of binding international law, its acceptance by all countries around the world gives great moral weight to the fundamental principle that all human beings, whatever our nationality, place of residence, sex, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, language, or any other status, are to be treated equally and with respect.

The instruments of the international human rights framework are the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the nine core human rights treaties:

Declaration of the Rights of Boys and Girls – Childrens Books Ireland

We are all equally entitled to our human rights without discrimination. These rights are all interrelated, interdependent and indivisible. The United Nations set a common standard on human rights with the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in 1948. Although the Declaration is not part of binding international law, its acceptance by all countries around the world gives great moral weight to the fundamental principle that all human beings, whatever our nationality, place of residence, sex, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, language, or any other status, are to be treated equally and with respect.

The United Nations has since adopted many legally binding international human rights treaties and agreements, including the Convention on the Rights of the Child. These treaties are used as a framework for discussing and applying human rights. The principles and rights they outline become legal obligations on the States that choose to be bound by them. The framework also establishes legal and other mechanisms to hold governments accountable in the event they violate human rights. The instruments of the international human rights framework are the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the nine core human rights treaties.
